VILLA IN FLIGHT; CAVALRY CLOSE ON HEELS OF BANDIT

CHILDREN SENT TO HOSPITAL

Mother and 4 Little Ones Found Strangely Affected by Neighbor Who Is Called; Gas Jet Open

The police are investigating the poisoning early today of Mrs. Jeremiah Mahoney and her four children, of No. 91 Mercer street, South Boston.

Although an open gas jet was found in the hall, there were symptoms connected with their illness which led the police to believe that gas might not have been wholly responsible for their condition.

Three of the children, William, aged nine; Gerald, six, and Margaret, three, were sent to the City Hospital. The baby Irene, a year old, and her mother are under treatment at home.

Early today Gerald ran across the street to the house of Mrs. Margaret Wilson. He was much excited and said:

"Baby Irene is black in the face. Mamma says to come quick."

Mrs. Wilson hurried to the Mahoney apartments on the second floor of the house, and found the baby in convulsions. As she stood in the bedroom, spellbound, Mrs. Mahoney became ill and dropped to the floor, where she writhed in agony.

One after another the children became ill, including Gerald, who had accompanied the neighbor back to the house. Mrs. Wilson, finding herself helpless to render assistance, telephoned to Dr. E. L. Bernard, who arrived within a short time and administered first aid. He then ordered the three children to the hospital and notified the police.

Captain Grant of Station 12 took personal charge of an investigation, which was begun owing to the fact that the victims suffered from convulsions. It is thought strange that gas poisoning should affect them in this way.

Mr. Mahoney, who is employed in Charlestown, had left the house to go to his work some time before the poisoning was discovered.

BERLIN SAYS ENGLISH MINE SANK LINER

Berlin, March 18.—German officials today reiterated their belief that the Dutch liner Tubantia struck a mine. They declared that the instructions to submarine commanders were sufficient to give assurance that the English claims that the steamer was torpedoed were false.

Berlin newspapers take the view that it probably was not even a German mine that destroyed the liner. They state that since the beginning of the war 915 mines have been washed to the Dutch coast, of which 480 were English, 58 French, 291 unidentified and only 175 German.

American Consul Mahin at Amsterdam Cables He Has Affidavits Showing Liner Torpedoed

Washington, March 18.—American Consul Frank W. Mahin at Amsterdam cabled the State Department today that he had obtained affidavits from survivors of the Dutch liner Tubantia which showed that the vessel was torpedoed.

Following is part of Consul Mahin's cablegram as made public by the State Department:

"Two officers and lookouts swear ship torpedoed. Most of passengers of same opinion. Four persons reported missing."

All Americans on board the Dutch liner were saved.

The Dutch foreign office has begun work upon a strong note of protest which will be sent to the German government and which will peremptorily demand an explanation.

Berlin, March 18.—A measure backed by three parties, though opposed by the government, was introduced in the Reichstag today, forbidding Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg from making any agreement with neutral nations that would limit submarine warfare.

The Liberals voted as a party today to support such a resolution. The measure would forbid further concessions to the United States.

The Conservative and Centre parties took similar action at meetings that preceded the Reichstag session, and a measure having the support of the three parties was introduced as soon as the Reichstag met.

The resignation of Admiral von Tirpitz is believed to have precipitated this action. It is expected that the bill will be passed. The text of the bill follows:

"Whereas, England makes war not only against armed forces of Germany, but has taken measures to impede the provisioning of Germany with victuals and raw materials in order to starve the nation into submission, for which purpose England brutally violates international law and uses force against neutral countries;

"Whereas, further, Germany is able by unlimited submarine warfare to increase England's lack of tonnage, that sufficient provisioning of the British nation with victuals and raw materials can be rendered extraordinarily difficult and perhaps impossible.

"Whereas, such warfare would bring nearer a victorious end of the war, the imperial chancellor is required not to enter into agreements with other countries, which would hinder us in the unlimited use of our submarine weapon, and prevent our making use of submarines against enemy traders, with the exception of passenger ships."

It is believed that the advance of the German allies against the Anglo-French forces is finally under way.

MEDFORD MAYOR TO STICK TO HIS JOB

Mayor Benjamin F. Haynes of Medford declares he will not be a candidate for the office of district attorney for Middlesex County in the coming election, as he desires to carry out many plans which he has begun as Mayor.

Mayor Haines plans the building of a new city hall, fire station, two schoolhouses, a new sewer system and many other projects. He says that it will necessitate a second term, consequently will have to abandon the district attorney canvas.

Rome, March 18.—The resignation of Admiral von Tirpitz as head of the German Admiralty was due to interference with his plans for attacking the British navy, according to reliable advices from German sources received here today. Von Tirpitz is said to have formulated an elaborate scheme to send out the whole German fleet for an attack on England, but was frustrated by the Kaiser and Prince Henry of Prussia, who insisted on more caution.

Taunton Miss Now Dances in Snow--Barefoot

Taunton, March 18.—The six girl dancers from Los Angeles who startled New Yorkers recently by doing a bare-legged dance in the snow in Central Park, clad only in brief Roman tunics, have nothing on Miss Ella Dunbar.

Miss Dunbar had almost nothing on herself, for that matter, when she staggered a force of street department employes by dancing in the snow in a vacant lot on one of the main streets, clad only in a negligee.

The young woman lives at No. 20 Pearl street, a half-mile from the scene of her bizarre dance.

A squad of patrolmen arrived in time to see the girl start on a cross-country dash, followed by the general neighborhood. She was caught after a half-mile sprint and was taken to Taunton State Hospital for observation.

SAVE DU PONT MEN FROM SINKING BOAT

Wilmington, Del., March 18.—Ten powder workers employed at the Du Pont plant had a narrow escape early today when the launch Hyacinth, on which they were crossing Delaware river, began to sink. The men took refuge on the roof of the cabin, and were taken off by sailors from the Norwegian freighter Malmo. All had their hands and feet frozen.

OUTLAW KILLS; APPLIES TORCH

By L. V. B. RUCKER.
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

San Antonio, Tex., March 18.—Expectations at Fort Sam Houston today are that General Pershing's troops in Mexico will meet their first opposition before night. Villa is known to be in flight south of Cascas Grandes with United States cavalry in close pursuit.

Major-General Funston was at his office early and ordered that wireless dispatches giving news of the punitive expedition be immediately brought to him.

The brief reports thus far received from General Pershing state that all is well with the expedition, and that the night was uneventful. The message gave the location of the troops, but General Funston declined to give out any information on this point. General Funston announced later that Colonel Dodd's column, which set out from Culbertson's ranch, had joined Colonel Slocum's forces late yesterday.

Two aeroplanes are now being used to scout ahead of the advancing troops.

Villa in Retreat Leaves Trail of Death and Fire

(LATEST.)

By International News Service.

El Paso, Texas, March 18.—Francisco Villa is fleeing southward from the Casas Grandes district without waiting to offer resistance to the American troops sent to effect his capture.

Villa and his bandits are killing and destroying as they retreat.

This information was received by General Gavira, Carranza commander at Juarez, today. He was notified that two small settlements in the valley of the Casas Grandes River, north of San Buenaventura, has been burned by the Villistas.

A number of persons at each place were killed.

From the valley of the Casas Grandes, Villa is expected to work back into the Sierra Madre Mountains. Here he has cached ammunition and food in places known only to himself and a few trusted men.

Two American columns have effected a junction at San Pedro, twenty-five miles south of the border.

Thus far there has been no fighting with any large bands of Villa bandits, but by Sunday the United States forces will be well into the territory where Villa has long spread terror.

The Seventh Cavalry, now in the lead of the Americans, has pressed forward by a splendid forced march to the edge of the Casas Grandes district.

AMERICANS IN FLIGHT FROM DEL RIO.

OUTLAWS SEEKING MOUNTAIN SAFETY

Horses to replace the tired mounts of the Seventh Cavalry troopers were sent forward from Columbus early today. That hard fighting was expected within a short time is evidenced by the fact that a pack train of ammunition also left Columbus.

Another proof that a conflict was regarded as imminent is seen in the tightening of the censorship along the border. To insure secrecy as to movements of the American and Carranza troops, the United States and Mexican authorities joined hands. A press courier with the American forces dashed ahead of the troops in Guzman to file dispatches over the federal wires into Juarez. He was arrested there and taken back to the American side.

The correspondents who were selected to accompany the expedition into Mexico have been placed with the rear guard infantry. One of them got through a message stated "somewhere in Mexico," in which he asked for a pipe, but of the troop movements he was not permitted to say a word.

The censorship is fully justified by discoveries made by the American military authorities on the border. They have ascertained that Villa spies are active at every point.

The bandit leader's secret agents are getting through to the leader in the desolate wastes that only Mexicans understand every scrap of information that can be learned as to the direction in which the "Americanos" are spreading, their strength and their plans.

The Villa "secret service" has been badly crippled by the numerous arrests made at El Paso and other points, but it is still in operation.

DASH OF SEVENTH CAVALRY.

News of the first actual encounter with Villa's forces may not become known for several days after it has taken place. The censors state that it will be reported only when its publication will not interfere with strategic aims of the American troops.

News of the gallant ride made by the Seventh Cavalry on the dash that carried the troopers almost within range of the Villista haunts in the Casas Grandes district first became known in Juarez.

General Gavira could not identify the troopers from the reports brought in by his men, who told of the wonderful night ride of the Americans on their big horses, but the advices from Columbus stating that reinforcements had been sent forward to the Seventh revealed the identity of the dashing cavalrymen.

At the start of the dash every spare ounce of equipment had been abandoned. Far up the line the officer in command raised his arm high and made the stiff, jerky signal that meant double-quick. The column started forward. All during the long afternoon the troops pressed on. The desert dust rose in a smothering cloud, blinding them and clutching at their throats. Their uniforms were powdered with it and it streaked their faces like grotesque masks.

IN TOUCH WITH ENEMY.

Then the sun dropped behind the high peaks and the quick dusk of the mountains fell. Night found the men still in the saddle. The moon made the deep shadows of the hills blacker and more forbidding, but it could not pierce the dust through which the silent figures moved like ghosts.

Finally came the order to halt. The cavalrymen slipped from their mounts, were sent scurrying but ready to resume the terrible pace with the new day. The great ride had tried their mettle and had found it not wanting.

The arrival of the troopers at the edge of the Casas Grandes district brought American cavalrymen, Carranzista soldiers and Francisco Villa's outlaws within striking distance of one another.

Colonel Dodd's column was reported as heading southwest of La Ascension on the Rio de Janos. It flanked on the right the column under Colonel Slocum. General Pershing was said today to be in the neighborhood of Guzman.

From Chihuahua overnight slow jolting troop trains brought to Juarez Carranzistas, presumably bound for Casas Grandes. Between San Pedro and Summit they passed a bridge recently burned by the Villistas. It was believed the march would be taken up on foot.

Mexican scouts today brought word that Villa was still in the neighborhood of Namiquipa.

There is a feeling of unrest growing more evident, that has spread through Mexico. General Carranza's declaration that his men would cooperate with the American expedition to avenge the Villa massacre at Santa Ysabel.

Veterans of the frontier foresee further difficulty in the anticipated plan of the Americans to establish a supply base on the Mexico Northwestern road. This means that supplies and ammunition will be shipped through Juarez. The sight of the ammunition being forwarded through to a Mexican city on the border will arouse all Mexicans, say the veterans, will be the signal for the hurling of countless numbers of Carranzistas against the soldiers of the United States. The Villistas, to Villa's liking. He has sent his scouts riding throughout Mexico shouting the Villa battle cry: "Come with us. No more bullets for my countrymen. They are for the gringos!"

GAVIRA TO TAKE COMMAND.

Nightly come reports to Fabens, known to the Texas Rangers as one of the "toughest" smugglers' haunts on the border, that Villa agents across the river hold nightly mass meetings to whip the people to a frenzy against the Yankees. Troops of the Eighth Cavalry, it is said, have been posted at Fabens to prevent a repetition of the Columbus massacre.

General Gaviria, commandant at Juarez, announced that the Mexican government is going to make an experiment of its own with censorship. He stated at his headquarters that hereafter there will be no publication of the movements of his troops.

It was known, however, that Mexican soldiers deported late yesterday toward Casas Grandes. General Bertani, who was in command at Las Palomas, is said to have been at the head of the Carranzistas. It was rumored that Gaviza himself would go to the Casas Grandes district within a few hours to take command of the operation there.

residents of the country to the north of Casas Grandes, and then turned off sharply to the east and south, going direct to Geleana City, which is one of his friendly settlements and where he is known.

"He told the Mexicans who talked with him that he was going toward Santana and Las Chapas, which is located in the town of Galeana, and in the San Buena Ventura district, where he will probably make his camp.

"I believe that Villa will disband his force as soon as he learns of the size of the American force and that the American troops will have the greatest difficulty in finding any trace of his band or of Villa himself, as he knows every trail and hiding place in the mountains."

'ALL MY BULLETS FOR GRINGOES,' SAYS VILLA

By H. H. STANSBURY.

El Paso, Texas, March 18 (by courier and telephone from Columbus, N. M., and border points).—The advance guard of the United States army expedition forces in Mexico was reported to be near San Pedro last night. This is a small settlement not shown in commercial maps. It is just twenty-five miles south of the border from Palomas.

The base hospital at Columbus reported the entire command in good health. There had been no fighting. Four aeroplanes which crossed near Palomas yesterday afternoon were to do scout duty on the march today. Another day's march would carry the head of the column to a point a few miles west of Lake Guzman.

Colonel George A. Dodd, commanding the Seventh and Tenth Cavalry, was ordered to abandon his dash direct to the Casas Grandes district shortly after crossing the border. He joined Colonel Slocum and the advance guard formed by the Thirteenth Cavalry.

General Pershing, commanding the expedition, came back from Boca Grande to the wireless station, which has been established five miles south of Palomas, and conferred with General Funston at San Antonio. After the conference the expedition proceeded as one column. No explanation for the change of the original order was given.

"Pancho" Villa was reliably reported to be headed for the mountain fastnesses of the Galeana district. He sent a communication to all Carranza commanders in the vicinity of his operations, of which message a liberal translation is:

"Come with us; no more bull*ts for my countrymen; they are all for the gringoes."

DISORDERS IN MEXICAN COAST DISTRICTS GIVE GREAT CONCERN

By International News Service.

Washington, March 18.—Reports of troubled conditions on both the east and west coasts of Mexico have reached Washington. While these conditions were told by officials to have no reference to the invasion of Mexican territory by the American expeditionary forces, they nevertheless added an element of gravity to a situation already giving great concern.

Americans at Tampico were reported in official dispatches to be alarmed. Villista forces controlled the Tampico-Tuxpan oil district. British and Dutch interests own big oil properties there, and were looking to the United States to aid in protecting those interests.

Officials would not admit that this concern for the safety of Americans and for foreign property interests influenced the action of the Navy Department in ordering the transport Hancock, with 500 marines from Philadelphia, to the marine station at Pensacola, Fla. Nor would it be admitted that the altitude continuously of the marines in the east coast of Mexico. There were indications of activity on the part of the navy, however, that showed plainly that the United States was moving to protect its interests wherever they might be threatened by conditions in Mexico.

MENACE BRITISH INTERESTS.

The United States, getting in accord with the British and Netherlands governments, obtained tacit understandings in the past looking to the neutralizing of the oil territory in the Tampico-Tuxpan districts. Since the United States and British governments recognized Carranza, however, the situation has been made more difficult because Villistas are in control of a large part of that territory, and the two governments can only deal diplomatically with Carranza.

There was a suggestion that an arrangement might be worked out by which the United States could co-operate with Carranza forces in restoring order in the Tampico-Tuxpan districts. Officials would not discuss this possibility, although there were insistent reports that the movement of marines, the retirement of the battleship Kentucky from New Orleans to Vera Cruz, and the presence of the fleet in Southern waters were all indicative of a movement in the direction of aiding a settlement of the troubled condition of the east coast.

Charge Beecher of the British Embassy conferred with Acting Secretary Polk at the State Department. It was understood this conference had to do with the situation in the Mexican oil fields.

YAQUIS MAKE TROUBLE.

The situation on the west coast was due to the depredations of Yaqui Indians, who have compelled Carranza to maintain a large force of troops there for months. There were no intimations that Villa was responsible for the uprising of Indians, but there were fears that the campaign against him might influence the 4,000 Yaquis to renewed activity.

The State Department gave out a number of reports from consular agents on the border and at interior Mexican points, all quiet Thursday, which showed that no outbreaks had followed the entry of American forces. Reports from El Paso, Nogales, Brownsville, Laredo and Eagle Pass said conditions were quiet. A telegram from Monterey dated Thursday said most of the Americans there had gone to Texas.

The arrival at Laredo of forty Americans from Torreon, including Consular Agent Alfred Williams, was officially reported. The State Department said no explanation would be requested of Consul Williams for his leaving his post without warning.

VILLISTAS BURN BRIDGE IN PATH OF AMERICANS

El Paso, Texas, March 18.—The Villistas have burned a railroad bridge 240 feet in length near Corralitos, in the path of the American advance. Other bridges also are reported burned.

Leading cattlemen have offered $50,000 reward for Villa's head, making a total of $100,000 bounty for the death of the outlaw.

George Carothers, special agent of the State Department, has received a report from Mexican sources that Carranza was assassinated. No confirmation is possible here.

Villa was at Hacienda La Boca Thursday night and is making forced marches to reach Santana and his old hiding place, where he remained in the hills for five years eluding Diaz's armies after killing one of the minor jefes de politicos of Chihuahua.

This information was brought to the border by a Mormon rancher who owns a ranch southeast of Casas Grandes and who saw Villa pass his ranch going southeast last Thursday.

HAS MANY WOUNDED.

"When he came from Corralitos ranch he moved down to Corralitos station and within three miles of Casas Grandes without the Carranza troops, who number 800 in the Casas Grandes garrison, making any effort to molest him," the American Mormon said.

"Villa had no more than 250 men when he rode around Casas Grandes and out to the Alsomah lakes, where he camped and obtained water for his stock.

"He then took the trail, traveling

SONORA GOVERNOR SAYS HE WILL GIVE U. S. EXPEDITION AID

By JOSEPH TIMMONS.

Douglas, Ariz., March 18.—"I guarantee that both soldiers and civilians of the State of Sonora will obey the First Chief and co-operate with the American expedition for the capture of Villa, the bandit," declared General Plutarco Elias Calles, Governor of Sonora, in an interview given to a representative of the International News Service.

General Calles pronounced the rumors of a revolt of the soldiers in the camp of Chihuiona to be absolutely false. Asked if he would oppose the entrance of American soldiers into Sonora territory if Villa should flee into Sonora, General Calles said, through an interpreter:

That is a contingency that will not arise. We have 25,000 soldiers in Sonora, and the passes on the eastern boundary are well guarded. If Villa and his entire band came into the State we will capture him.

If by any chance he should be pursued into Sonora by the Americans our soldiers will obey the order to co-operate. If the First Chief issues other orders to meet conditions, I will obey as a loyal soldier.

The purpose of the American military expedition to capture Villa and his outlaw band and the wish of the First Chief and General Obregon that loyal Mexicans shall regard the situation calmly and render what aid they can have been thoroughly expounded to our people.

They understand and are satisfied to support the orders of the First Chief. The peace of Mexico is not involved. It is not dependant on the capture of Villa. We have peace now. Villa is simply a bandit and can only continue to stir up as much trouble as possible.

Villa and all his outlaw band must be captured sooner or later. If some escape, they will go on stealing and pillaging, but that will not affect the stability of the de facto government.

General Calles states that the 300,000 rounds of Mauser ammunition, American-made, which has just been delivered to him, as well as the 400,000 rounds still to be obtained under the permit issued at Washington, would be used to supply the soldiers of Sonora to make them efficient in guarding its territory against a Villa raid, and should not be considered in any degree a menace to American soldiers of the punitive expedition.

Two Americans Slain on Ranch

Galveston, Tex., March 18.—Two American citizens were murdered on a ranch west of Torreon, Monday night, according to advices reaching here today from the border. The news was brought by Mexican refugees.

It is said the Americans were killed during an anti-American demonstration in which half a hundred Mexicans participated. The bodies of the dead Americans were left at the ranch house when the Mexicans took to their mad northward, hoping to join some squad of Villa soldiers.

Bar U. S. Army From Casas Grandes

El Paso, Texas, March 18.—General Gavira, Carranza's commandant, said that when the American troops arrived at Casas Grandes they would not be allowed to enter the city.

His instructions from General Carranza, he said, did not give him authority to let American troops occupy a city. It would be contrary to General Carranza's orders, he added.

Believe Own Men Will Kill Villa for Reward.

By JOHN EDWIN NEVIN,
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

Washington, March 18.—Officials made it plain today that the request of General Gavira, the Carranzista commander at Juarez, that the American expedition do not occupy any Mexican cities of towns is considered reasonable.

It is known that the establishment of a base in a Mexican city by the American forces would certainly be misunderstood by the Mexican people. To avoid this it is expected that the expeditionary forces will give all cities and towns a wide berth in their progress toward the south.

It is not expected that any real information regarding the plans of the American forces will be forthcoming here for several days. The censorship put into effect by the General Staff, as represented by Captain Cootes, is absolute so far as information regarding troop movements is concerned.

This is at the request of General Funston, who takes the position that the news should come through his headquarters, as he is best able to determine what should or should not be published.

One thing that officials seem agreed upon, however, is that Villa will not be captured alive. As a matter of fact this government will much prefer him dead, inasmuch as if caught alive the New Mexico authorities would be certain to demand him for trial as responsible for the Columbus killings, while Carranza could be depended upon to insist that he be turned over. Parts and sentenced to death.

Convict Greek as Spy.

Paris, March 18.—A Greek actor named Condagannis has been convicted as a spy by a court martial in to his troops for court-martial and to face a firing squad.

The news from the border that private concerns are offering rewards for the death of Villa leads officials who are perfectly familiar with conditions to believe that some of the bandit leader's own men will be the ones to "get him."

The reward method has frequently been resorted to on the border to get bandits, and when the purse is made large enough it never fails to succeed.

State Department officials pointed out today that the situation in the Tampico district, where serious trouble is feared, is not new. Torreon and Tuxpan have been the scene of disorders, and this is due to the fact that Carranza has not yet made any effort to get control of this section.

It is understood that the attention of the First Chief has been called to the situation there, and that he has promised that troops will be sent to that region immediately.

In general, the situation throughout Mexico is described by the department as "fairly satisfactory."

VERMONT MODEL IN TRAGEDY

New York, March 18.—Her romance shattered, Addie M. Richardson, a corset model, aged about thirty, from Barre, Vt., took poison and was found dead in bed in Brooklyn. She left a dramatic letter comparing her experience to the Richeson case. The letter was addressed to J. Frank Baxter of New York.

On the bed was a bottle, which had contained poison. On the mantel was a letter the young woman had written. This letter, in part, said:

Frank: Have you ever thought there was more than one kind of murder?

You condemned Richeson because he gave poison to one girl to marry another who would give him more social standing after he had won the love and confidence and promised to marry the girl he killed.

You condemned Hans Schmidt because he killed a girl to save himself, after he had won her love.

COMPARED WITH RICHESON.

Are they one bit worse than a man who would accept everything from a woman, give her all kinds of promises, plan for their future together and then, after nearly three years, turn her down, when she had been straight with him in every thought and action?

No! Whatever happens, his hands are just as much stained as Ricneson's or Schmidt's.

The only difference is the world won't find him out, but believe me, if there is a just God, and I believe there is, he will be punished just as much with the sting of his own conscience.

You are just as much responsible for my death as if you had chopped me or poisoned me, and it would have been a thousand times more merciful to have killed me quickly than to have treated me as you have, and I only hope that when you ever take another girl in your arms as you have taken me, there will appear before your eyes the word "murderer," and if there is such a thing as coming back to earth, I will be there to single you out.

I have given you everything a woman could give. I am not sorry, because I love you better than any other woman will ever love you.

I cannot live without you and I cannot face my people and tell them I am not going to be your wife.

You have spoiled my life, and you have killed me. Now go your way and answer to your God for your crime.

POLICE QUESTION MAN.

The police questioned the man in the case. He said he and the girl had lived as brother and sister at another Brooklyn address for a year before taking apartments at 1,709 Cumberland street, house.

Miss Richardson, he said, came to New York four years ago from Barre, Vt. He said he first met her in a restaurant and their friendship developed from a flirtation. She had been savings account totalling $1,800.

An autopsy showed that the woman had died from drinking chloroform liniment.

Inasmuch as the letter was not sealed, he coroner opened it, and then made the contents public. So far as those in the house know, the man is not married. Relatives in Vermont have sent for the body.

"That Husband of Mine Deserved a Black Eye," Anita Baldwin Cries

A striking new photograph of Anita Baldwin, who was arrested for slapping the face of her husband, Baron Vincent de Patterson.

By RUTH M. BYERS.

New York, March 18.—"My husband doesn't need a wife; he needs a nurse."

Mrs. Beatrice Anita Baldwin Turnbull de Patterson, of No. 250 East One Hundred and Sixty-sixth street, was quite emphatic about the matter today. She was speaking of Baron de Patterson, whom she may not be "good court ethics, but it's very feminine to have the last word, and today Mrs. de Patterson had hers.

"Imagine how I felt when a man suddenly appeared at my door a few mornings ago to arrest me," Mrs. de Patterson's voice emphasized her indignation. "I was arrested, if you please, for beating up my husband in the New York Athletic Club. I tell you the whole thing made me mad."

She continued:

May be I did slap his face. There's nothing in the marriage service to prevent that, is there? Anyway, it was just a "love pat," the kind every wife gives her husband some time or other. But to be haled into court for a foolish little affair like that put quite a different look on things.

DESERVED BLACK EYE.

If it hadn't been for "contempt of court," I would have told the magistrate my only regret was I hadn't given that husband of mine a regular black eye while I was about it. That's what he deserved.

Mrs. de Patterson, slim, chic and more than usually good looking, suddenly became silent, then burst out:

I love my husband better than anything in this world. I would do anything, suffer any indignity, to bring him back again.

Isn't it funny, my husband never seemed to really understand me?

He kept leaving me all the time, and just as often as he would come back for a few days, love me as he used to, and then desert me again. I can't make him out.

There's no other woman in this case. It's financial trouble, and some day everything will come out, but this is not the time for me to talk about that.

SHOWS TATTERED HAT.

I know my husband didn't like the domestic atmosphere I injected into his wanderings by following him. But what could I do? I needed the money, and only my husband is entitled to the privilege of paying my bills.

Talk of temper—my husband did for an hour in court. What would you call this, temper or temperament?

Mrs. de Patterson held up a battered velvet hat for inspection. Its flowers were hanging in ribbons and the crown and lining were ripped and torn in a dozen places. She continued with a smile:

A husbandly exhibition of affection and temperament.

I tell you this marriage game is all a chance—for the girl at least.

Mrs. de Patterson spoke with authority. Certainly there was nothing indefinite or sketchy about her ideas of what marriage should be.

Girls make a mistake, when they marry a man too much older than they are.

My husband is forty-eight. I am twenty-two. I want to dance, skate and play tennis. He wants to read, play cards and go to the club.

You see, trouble starts right at this difference in tastes, and it always will with any girl.

Another thing I think is all wrong, is a rapid fire courtship. Two weeks' acquaintance is poor material on which to build a life of marital happiness that is going to last.

Too much club life wrecks more homes than most people suppose. Men are fearful gossips. They talk about their wives to each other far into the "wee sma'" hours at clubs where no woman is ever welcome, and it's pretty hard on the wife, that sort of thing.

Men need freedom, and they need a lot of it. I believe matrimonial vacations are what every man craves in his soul, and the tragedy of that is that no very few ever get them.

My husband is the only American citizen permitted to use a foreign title.

Mrs. de Patterson's voice grew suddenly weary as she proceeded. Her enthusiasm for titles had evidently waned fast during recent weeks. At last she said:

No, I am not going to get a divorce! That would be so stupid. I love my husband too much to do a thing like that. No one else ever mattered to me the way he does. Only I wonder.

JOAN SAWYER IN SUIT AGAINST RESTAURANT

Miss Joan Sawyer, the graceful exponent of the new dances, who spent the Summer at Winthrop and who started a suit for $100,000 damages against Byron Chandler, of "million-dollar" fame, for alleged breach of promise, has taken steps to sue the manager of the Sawyer dancing restaurant on Broadway for $5,000 for alleged breach of contract. She was barred by Manager Clifford C. Fischer from the restaurant which bears her name.

Bostonians will have followed the sparkling career of Miss Sawyer and who have seen her in dances in this city, are watching with interest all developments in this latest suit in New York.

These Bostonians recall, too, the interest which attached to the suit she filed against Byron Chandler. This was in 1908. The case never came to trial.

Miss Sawyer declared, in her bill of complaint against Chandler, that on June 29, 1907, he proposed marriage to her after knowing her only one week. At that time she was a soubrette in "The Merry-Go-Round" company. Chandler denied these allegations.

FAME AS DANCER.

The following year Miss Sawyer spent several weeks in Winthrop, where she made many friends on account of her pretty face and pleasant manner.

Since then she has climbed to fame and good income as an exponent of the new dances. She has appeared in Boston at the head of a large stage company, with herself featured in dance specialties.

The present suit in New York seems to turn on the question whether Manager Fischer of the Sawyer restaurant can legally keep Miss Sawyer from dancing there. This resort of diners and dancers is at Fiftieth street and Broadway. Fischer leases the Knickerbocker and the Montmarte, the latter another restaurant in the same building.

Miss Sawyer says:

"Mr. Fischer barred me from the Sawyer Wednesday night. By refusing to permit me to dance he broke his contract with me. My contract does not expire until May 21. By its terms the party failing to live up to the conditions agrees to pay $500 a week. So I have engaged counsel to sue for money at this rate. Now that I have made the restaurant popular the management feels that it can get along nicely without me. But I am ready to dance there and all I wish is for Mr. Fischer to live up to our contract.

MANAGER RETORTS.

Mr. Fischer says:

"It is true that Miss Sawyer was not permitted to dance. I like Miss Sawyer personally, but I must run my own business to suit myself. If we deem it wise not to permit Miss Sawyer to continue to dance here, the management must take the responsibility."

Boston Girl, Star Actress, in Keith's Water Production

MISS MILDRED MACOMBER

A little Boston dancer, barely out of her teens, and as nimble-footed, graceful and agile as an animated rubber ball with butterfly wings, will make her debut at B. F. Keith's Theatre Monday afternoon.

Her name is Mildred Macomber, and she is supported by a company of twenty dancers, gentlemen's models, diving Venuses, etc., including Willard Foote and the Sun Girls, in a big spectacular scenic and water production, "Holiday's Dream."

Little Miss Macomber is the personification of grace. She is equally at home performing any kind of a dance, and be it the Spanish dance of old Castile, the "Danse Classique" of ancient Greece, or the modern society dances of present-day America, she is equally at home with any one.

Miss Macomber's dancing partner, Willard Foote, who plays the role of Jack Holiday in the big spectacle, hails from the Pacific coast. He was principal dancer with Ruth St. Denis for several seasons.

The Servant of the Lamp

ALADDIN'S lamp had a wonderful Servant—a genie who could serve a banquet in a twinkling and build a palace overnight.

But that was long ago in Baghdad, in the days of Scheherzade and the Sultan Haroun-al-Raschid.

Today there are new lamps, less picturesque, perhaps, but more useful. And the new lamp has a new servant, whose name is Socony.

Socony (So-CO-ny) is the name of the Standard Oil Company of New York's best kerosene. Aladdin's lamp never had a servant half so clean and efficient and reliable as Socony Kerosene Oil.

Socony is easily summoned—just say "Socony" to the grocer's boy when you give him your oil can to get filled.

Socony Kerosene Oil is free from dirt or grit of any kind. It burns with a clear, full flame and does not leave wick crust.

In fact, it is so much better than ordinary kerosene that it is decidedly worth asking for.

Groceries, hardware and general stores which carry Socony Kerosene Oil, display the Socony sign in their windows.

Look for the Socony sign. It is the sign of a reliable dealer.

We recommend the following oil burning devices as the best of their kind: New Perfection Oil Cookstoves and Water Heaters, Perfection Smokeless Oil Heaters, Rayo Lamps and Lanterns.

END OF WAR IS NOW IN SIGHT, SAYS FRENCH MINISTER RIBOT

By International News Service.

Paris, March 18.—In the Chamber of Deputies, Finance Minister Ribot said it is now possible to foresee the end of the war.

Speaking prior to voting on all the clauses of the 1917 appropriations, Mr. Ribot said:

"We spent more than 23,000,000,000 francs in 1915. Nevertheless, our situation is satisfactory, thanks to our national loan, quotations of which is admirably maintained above the issue price

OUTLAYS INCREASE.

"Our expenditure has since necessarily increased and will increase to 30,000,000 francs daily. England spends 110,000,000 francs daily.

"The hour has not come for us to add to our country's fiscal burdens, a sense of the deputies desire.

"A heavier burden, the government feels, would fall entirely on the working classes.

"France will pay all her debts. It will be necessary to make the required effort, however hard, to pay what France so gloriously has spent. Drink, assuredly, will have to be taxed. Seven months ago I introduced a proposal for an alcohol tax, but it was not adopted."

"POLICY OF VICTORY."

Interrupting, Deputy Brisson said:

"The government has no financial policy."

"Yes, M. Brisson, it has a policy—a policy of victory," replied Minister Ribot. "Not much can be expected from the new income tax. It will not give the billions we need. We have looked over taxation schedules for property values and industrial profits, but the taxation cannot be increased. It would not give revenue, partly because of the moratorium.

"What we must do is to maintain the country's confidence. We have reached the decisive hour. The whole world looks toward Verdun.

"I can say without illusion that it is possible to perceive the end of this war. I beg of you, for the sake of victory and the honor of the parliamentary regime, not to do anything to diminish the confidence of our soldiers, who should have leaders worthy of them."

The modern 15-acre plant pictured above stands back of every Crawford Range. And because they are made in the best factory of its kind in the world, Crawford Ranges can't help being the best.

Crawford Ranges

The Woman who owns a Crawford cooks with the World's Best Range

Buying a Range is like buying a diamond. It depends on the stove—it depends on the stone.

No Range can be too good. Buying the best Range is a duty—a duty to your home—to yourself—to your family.

The Range burns the coal and cooks the food. Coal costs money. Perfectly cooked food provides health.

The Range that uses less coal—and through scientific construction cooks perfectly and most easily—is the Range to buy—the Range to own.

Imitating the Crawford Range

The greatest proof of Crawford Range leadership is the imitation of its unique features. There are certain Crawford distinctions that are embodied in nearly every other Range upon the market.

The Crawford has always led in improvements. Thanks to Crawford patents, the most important of these cannot be imitated.

That wonderful Crawford Single Damper which with one movement controls the fire and the oven cannot be found in any other Range on the market.

Twenty Crawford Advantages

On the inside of a Crawford Range as well as on the outside you will find reasons why Crawford Ranges excel.

The Crawford embodies more invention and a closer scientific construction than other Ranges. Your eyes and your common sense will appreciate its advantages at once.

You simply cannot be a poor cook with a Crawford. It does the thinking for you.

And its low coal consumption and its perfect system of heat-distribution also make the Crawford the most economical Range.

A Crawford saves and satisfies—always.

"Why I Sell Crawford Ranges!"

Any Crawford Dealer will tell you why he is proud to sell Crawford Ranges. And he has good reason to be proud. He is selling the World's best Range—and can prove it—easily—surely—without argument.

If you have inspected all the other Ranges in town you will quickly forget them when you see a Crawford.

You'll buy a Crawford. You can't help it. The Dealer will show it to you—and the Crawford will sell itself.

The patented Single Damper—the scientific flue system—the labor-saving double Ash Hods—and the many other Crawford conveniences will prove irresistible.

Our Pride in the Crawford Plant

The Crawford is made in the world's greatest stove plant. Not greatest in size—but greatest in invention, efficiency and system that make possible the best Range in the world.

It is a matter of record that the leading stove men come to Watertown, Mass., to see our plant—and go away convinced that ours is the finest equipped stove plant in existence.

The Crawford Range is made with the utmost care. And the half century of skill and experience behind it and in it give the Crawford a national reputation that even our competitors admit.

The Crawford Range as an Investment

The Crawford Range is a life-time investment. Thousands of women who pride themselves on their cooking think the Crawford simply cannot be improved.

However, we are our own severest critics. If the best can be bettered we will do it. For the Crawford ideal is never really satisfied.

To improve—to build still better—to add more and more to its wonderful supremacy—is our constant aim.

Yet the fact remains: Today's Crawford Range seems as near perfect as is humanly possible.

And one thing is certain. When you buy your Crawford you are buying a range that has never yet been equalled—a Range that is a life-time investment—for you and for your children.

Gas ovens if desired; and (single) or elevated (double).

Visit your Crawford Dealer. He will give you the twenty reasons why we call the Crawford, Crawford. Every reason he gives you will be an added reason for you to own one.

WAR SUMMARY

Early dispatches today showed that the opposing forces at Verdun were exchanging artillery fire, but that the infantry divisions were getting a breathing spell. The French official report of the night said the Germans directed their heaviest shelling against the French positions northeast of the fortress and that the French gunners responded with vigor.

The German War Office announces the French assaults on Dead Man Hill have involved twenty-seven divisions to date, or a total of 540,000 men, used on the French side alone in the furious struggle for this strategic point on the Verdun front.

Petrograd dispatches say that German attacks northwest of Dvinsk are preliminary to a great Teuton offensive against the Russians.

Following the retirement of Admiral Von Tirpitz, the London Daily Telegraph quotes Italian press reports hinting that Von Tirpitz was insane and wished to sink both belligerent and neutral ships.

London dispatches announce that England is to issue an order soon prohibiting the importation of many luxuries. The president of the London Board of Trade admits that such an order will have considerable effect upon exports from the United States.

Employment reports from London show that 363,000 women in the skilled trades alone are holding places formerly held by men, to say nothing of women in government employ and farming.

VERDUN BATTLE REACHES ITS CLIMAX

By International News Service.

London, March 18.—The battle of Verdun, which, more than two weeks ago, developed over a semi-circular front of fifty miles, has narrowed down to a death grapple of more than 1,000,000 men on little more than two bloody miles.

The furious conflict is centred on the height known as Dead Man Hill, to which both armies lay claim. This crest of forbidding name is the key to Verdun from the northwest. Upon its possession depend the solution of tremendous issues of the western campaign.

The German War Office announces that the French have buried twenty-seven divisions, 540,000 men, against the positions held by the Germans. Division has succeeded division, and corps has replaced corps in this, the crucial struggle of the war.

CRISIS AT FRONT.

Victory at Dead Man, it is generally recognized here today, means victory at Verdun.

The crest for which both armies are fighting is called Dead Man, because, from a distance, its topography lends that impression to the eye. The hill is the man's head and the Corbeaux (Crow or Raven) wood stretches out like a black shroud.

The Germans hold the wood and claim the hill. The French assert that the crest, which dominates the plain below in three directions, involving practical possession of Bethincourt, to the north, and artillery command of the field defenses of forts to the south, is in their hands.

Today's communique from the French War Office tells of tremendous artillery activity about Verdun. The text of the official communique follows:

"On the Argonne, in the sector of Courtes Chasses, a battle of mines resulted to our advantage.

"West of the Meuse we directed a concentrated fire upon the German trenches in the direction of Hill No. 265 and the Corbeaux forest. The enemy did not reply.

VAUX BOMBARDED.

"East of the Meuse there was a violent bombardment in the region of Vaux. It was intermittent at other points in that sector, as well as in the Woevre, on the outskirts of Moulainville, Haudiomont and Eparges.

"Northeast of St. Mihiel our heavy artillery bombarded throughout the night the Apremont-Vigneulles road, on which enemy regiments were reported marching in a northerly direction. No important developments are reported on the rest of the front.

"Despite the fog and lowering clouds, our battle aviators yesterday made in the region of Verdun twenty-nine flights, in the course of which they fought thirty-two combats in the air. One Fokker machine appears to have been the only one hit.

"During the night of March 17-18 a squadron of seventeen bombarding aeroplanes threw fifty-four shells of large calibre, forty on the station of Conflans and fourteen on the station at Metz. Many shells were well aimed, inflicting heavy damage on the railway, and three fires were seen in the station at Metz-Sablonez. Though attacked by seven enemy aeroplanes, which silently shelled on their return, all the aviators reached their base safely.

"In the course of an offensive reconnaissance another of our squadrons threw ten shells on the aerodrome at Dieuze and five on the station at Arnaville."

'German Losses Near 250,000'

Special to the International News Service and London Times.

Paris, March 18.—The German losses in the desperate enterprise against Verdun, positive fruits of which are only to be found on paper, must now be more than a quarter of a million. The sort of thing that has been going on for days is neither magnificent nor war. It is just scientific slaughter and serves only to display the courageous tenacity of both defenders and attackers.

Whole fields of dead now stretch before the centre of the entire attack, officer who has returned from Vaux gives a picture of what is happening night along the attacked point of the salient.

"Our artillery is now in excellent position, from which it crushes the attacking battalions," he said. "Now and again on occasional nights one manages to get through to the chateau ruined villages, only to be destroyed by machine guns or the bayonet.

"In some cases it would seem the lies of the Germans have recoiled upon their own heads and that the army before Verdun itself believes them.

"Thus, after the report of the capture of Vaux, a company of the Nineteenth Reserve Regiment marched toward the village, with its officer at its head, and arms at shoulders, without doubting that its compatriots were in front.

"The French actually allowed them to enter the village. Then, when they got into the main street, our troops opened fire with machine guns and seized the Germans, who took refuge in cellars, where they were killed by grenades or the bayonet."

Count De Cazes Dies in Thrilling Duel in the Air

Paris, March 18.—Count Jacques Decazes, an aviator in the French army, has been killed in an air battle at the front, plunging in grief the famous Franco-American Decazes family. The Count was only twenty-six years old and before the war was a favorite in Paris society. The battle which cost the Count his life was fought 9,000 feet in the air. The German airmen occupied a huge armored battleplane of the Fokker type and the French aeroplane was riddled with machine gun fire. The Count's mother before her marriage to Duc Decazes, a Duke, was Isabella Blanche Singer, daughter of Isaac Singer, the millionaire sewing machine manufacturer.

ARTHUR WOODS TO WED MORGAN HEIRESS

The nation's best romance in some time was revealed in a New York dispatch today announcing the engagement of a son of Boston—Arthur Woods, New York's famous "Harvard Police Commissioner"—to Miss Helen Morgan Hamilton of New York, society girl, heiress and favorite granddaughter of the late J. Pierpont Morgan.

And the news will not only give society in Boston and elsewhere something to talk about over the teacups, but will throw publicity for the first time on one of the most charming love matches in years.

Mr. Woods is forty-five, a Harvard graduate, is a self-made man, has long been considered one of the most eligible of bachelors for whom debutantes galore "have set their caps." He was made head of New York's Police Department two years ago.

Miss Hamilton is twenty, and has been called a typically American girl —she is talented and versatile, and is a lover of the out-of-doors, being fond of sports and an excellent equestrienne.

In Mr. Woods, also, the virile American traits stand out.

Their love story does not date from the stiffly formal introduction in some society drawing-room. It is more fetching by far than that. Their romance is the romance of a meeting at a dance.

Miss Hamilton is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Pierson Hamilton of East Fifty-sixth street, New York. She is the great-great-granddaughter of Alexander Hamilton, and the granddaughter of the senior Morgan. When Mr. Morgan died at the Grand Hotel in Rome several years ago, Miss Hamilton was at his bedside. Her father is a member of the Morgan banking firm.

TODAY'S STOCK MARKETS

By W. H. ROSS,
Financial Editor

Stocks were weak at the close both in New York and Boston. The price range was narrow throughout the session and markets remained quiet from start to finish. Sentiment had an optimistic tinge. Many traders expect a resumption of the upward movement next week.

Closing declines in New York included Anaconda ⅜, Chino ¼, Kennecott ⅛, Utah Copper ⅜, Tennessee Copper ¼, American Zinc 2, Butte & Superior ⅜, American Smelting ½, Mexican Petroleum ⅛, Car and Foundry ¼, American Loco 1⅝, Baldwin ⅛, Colorado Fuel ⅛, Crucible Steel ⅜, Great Northern Ore ⅝, Lackawanna Steel 1, Republican Steel ½, U. S. Steel ¼, Goodrich ⅛, Maxwell ½, Studebaker ⅝, N. Y. Air Brake 2, Westinghouse ⅜, Willys-Overland 2⅝, Baltimore & Ohio ¼, Erie ¼, New York Central ⅝, Northern Pacific ½, Southern Pacific ⅛ and Union Pacific ¼.

Among gains were American Can ⅜, Distillers 1⅜, Texas Co. ⅜, Industrial Alcohol ⅝, Canadian Pacific ⅝, Chesapeake & Ohio ½, Reading ⅝ and Norfolk & Western ⅝.

Declines in Boston at the close included American Zinc 1⅜, Butte & Superior ⅝, Ahmeek 1, Old Dominion ⅜, St. Mary ¼, Trinity ⅜, U. S. Smelting ⅜, United Shoe ¼, Atlantic Gulf common ⅜, preferred ½, United Fruit ½ and New Haven ⅛.

Among gains were Alaska Gold ⅛, Lake ⅜ and Superior ⅛.

Among unchanged issues were Arcadian Copper, Copper Range, North Butte, Osceola, Quincy, Tamarack, Wolverine, Boston & Maine and Woolen preferred.

On the New York Metal Exchange spelter was firm, late March 17½c, second quarter 15¾ to 16c. Copper was firm and quiet, spot 25c, nearby deliveries 23½c, June 27½c, third quarter 27c.

IRREGULAR AT OPENING.

Stocks were irregular in New York at the opening, but price changes were small as a rule. Norfolk & Western and Texas Co. began a point or more higher. Mexican Petroleum was off ¾, but soon recovered and gained a point. It lost part of the advance almost immediately. War industrials were the most active issues. Coppers and railroads were quiet. American Zinc was fractionally lower. Trading was not as active at the start as on previous days this week. The market appeared to be awaiting developments. Early transactions were of a professional character in most instances. It looked at the start as if speculative operations today would be of the usual week-end character.

Before the end of the first hour Studebaker was off 2¼, Baldwin had declined 1¼, Crucible was off ⅝, U. S. Steel ¼ and Mexican Petroleum was ⅛ below yesterday's closing price.

The Boston market was narrow, irregular and quiet at the start, with U. S. Smelting and American Zinc the most active issues. Neither was strong. St. Mary declined a point on a single transaction and coppers were dull as a class.

RAISE PAY OF NAVY YARD IRON WORKERS

Washington, March 18.—Following a conference between Congressman George Holden Tinkham and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Roosevelt relative to a petition from the Boston Typographical Union of North America protesting against an inadequate wage schedule for moulders employed at the Boston Navy Yard, Captain Rush, commandant of the yard, was instructed by the Navy Department to create two additional grades of pay, $4 and $3.76 per day, and to promote several of the moulders from their previous maximum rate of $3.52 a day to the two new rates.

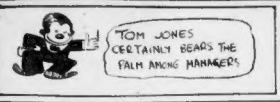
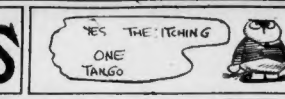
The Wise Man Utilizes His Obstacles as Stepping Stones on the Road to Success



BOSTON AMERICAN SPORTS



Haughton Hits Camp Likes Looks of Braves

By JOHN W. MORAN, JR.

MIAMI, Fla., March 15.—C. Herenles Ebbets may, in his day, have invented one or two different special occasions on which to pull off baseball games and, by the same token, P. T. Barnum was a wonder at dragging rain from the gullible public with his tent shows. Still, neither of the pair had a thing on Walter E. Hapgood, business manager of the Braves.

"Hap" planned this afternoon to pull off a double-header for the edification of the local fans. If that is not doing something the people in the Braves party want to know just what is. First, he revolutionized Spring camps by charging prices for the Regular vs. Yannigan games. Then he handed another bolt by assessing the fans six bits for seats in the grandstand today.

Now comes the double header which casts all other things into oblivion. It's not known whether he thought of the name the day he was invited to President Haughton on his first Saturday in Miami, or simply because two games might attract more people than one show. At all events he thought of it and we thought of it, for George Stallings thinks "Hap" even greater than Barnum ever was.

HAUGHTON SAYS IT'S SWELL IN MIAMI.

President Haughton slid into town on the early morning caller yesterday, and, finding himself without Rudy Gowdy made his appearance in the dining room, clad in a vivid green sackcloth. Perce Haughton had a soft spot in The Braves' boss wasn't long in finding his way to the table and it did not take Stallings much longer to introduce him to the line of close to three miles back to the lunch.

This morning, by the time one of the early risers got before breakfast food a walk down along the shore of Biscayne Bay, drinking in the wonderful sights and fine air. He does not plan to let the training grind with the boys before Monday. After that, however, he hopes to work out each day, and some of the grand hops to get him in between them in a high-low game.

"Mighty pleased Haughton, really surprises me considerably. I had no idea it was such a wonderful spot. The ball park is all right, and everything I expected and I think that the time we come down here next Spring the ball field will be the best in the best in the South."

"What pleases me more than anything else, though, is the splendid condition of the players under George. I hardly expected to see them out loose as they did yesterday and you can tell them in Boston I am gratified. Their conditioning work will for the manner in which they took care of themselves this Winter. If they had not done that fine work Rudolph would not get into such a fine shape so rapidly this spring for the Braves and Miami, too."

Yesterday's game with the army team from Key West was little more short of a slaughter, the person in the stand remarked that it's a good thing the United States didn't go to war into Mexico to play baseball. The score 14 to 4 does not quite tell the story and a box score would hardly reveal the proceedings of the day.

REUCH GOES TO WORK.

Time after time the Braves made effort to get themselves put out, but the soldiers boys simply booted the chance to accept. Even the Boston Regulars for several innings and then sent the Sammies to bat. The latter took up the task in no more stone 8 to 1. To their first turn at bat they scored four runs, and, if Bill Rariden or Art Neft, the soldiers worked in four tallies. A majority of them were gifts, however. Rudolph had the soldiers baffaled all the while he worked.

"Big Ed" Reuhach got down to business yesterday morning and immediately started pitching to one of the catchers. He continued that work in the afternoon and this morning is at it again. The right arm feels fit, and before another week elapses will be ready to take his turn in the box. It is the belief of Robert Reuhach, like Haughton, is impressed with the wonders of this city.

Bill James really seems to be rounding into shape, and while it is still a little early to predict what he's regarding his case, there is nevertheless more hope than there has been at any time for practically a year. Bill sat with Haughton at noon yesterday, but neither would say what "happened" during the meal.

The Braves and the Army team will meet again this afternoon, the proceeding will to open the double-header. When that game is completed Hank Gowdy's big show will be brought to an end with a five-inning Braves-Seminole game. Gowdy is in need of rest with another week confronting the squad.

THE RABBITS' COLUMN

Luther J. Moranville
SHORTSTOP OF THE BRAVES

Miami, Fla., March 18.

All hands were pleased to see Pres. Haughton in the infield when the color down to breakfast yesterday. They will feel even more pleased when their new boss dons a uniform Monday and works out with them. Already a thousand schemes are being thought up to have some fun with him. However, I hear he was quite some ball player during his years at Harvard and he may surprise the gang. Mr. Haughton seems to be in the pink of condition and anyone who starts to take him for a "soft" may be greatly surprised. I, for one, won't attempt anything funny with him.

Ed Reulbach has been working quite hard since his arrival in camp and I look for him to show signs of starting to put something on the ball before long. He appears to be in fine general condition and I think he will be due for a big year with our club. Should Bill James regain the old 1914 form and Reulbach be as good as in his old club days, there ain't be anything to it but success for the club.

It is plain to be seen that our hitting staff will be strengthened considerably and there can be no fault found with our fielding. Consequently all in all it looks like a big year and I think we will have that.

They certainly are giving us a stiff grind this season for in addition to playing a nine-inning game on first afternoon we are to play a game and a double-header today. That's going some, believe me.

Reulbach remarked today that he was pleased to see Rudolph on the job and made friends in the old town. He told me that Bill Higgins and Eddie Cicotte, Chicago pitchers, the latter a former member of the Boston's Council, were students at Notre Dame at the same time as Reulbach. He anticipates many pleasant moments with them and also with Jim Loughlin of the Pensacolaic district.

Hank Gowdy sprung two new greens on yesterday and certainly gave Sir Patrick a swell "ride" for his game. Hank is bound to put something new across quite often these days. Somehow things have changed since the Spring of 1917.

Various kinds of parties are being arranged for tomorrow. I understand that Prez Haughton is going out for some deep sea fishing. Reulbach is to make a trip into the Everglades on an alligator hunt. Rudolph will go to cock flight in the afternoon and Sherwood Magee will play tennis at the Royal Palm Golf Club.

BRAVES' NOTES

By JOHN W. MORAN, JR.

Miami, Fla., March 18.—Concerts in the hotel parlor are extremely popular. Among the entertainers are Rudolph Smith and Art Nehf at the piano, and Tom Hughes and Maranville with their vocal chords.

Maranville is even better in voice than he was while at a Boston theatre. He has mastered "Cavalleria Rusticana," or something like that, and will always render it on request. Few of the players make the request.

Boston papers are anxiously watching the accounts of hockey games in which the Arena team is playing. The fidelity of the fellows know Fred Hoey and are interested in the success of his seven.

The terrible sun of the past week or so has burned through the skin of almost everyone in camp. Pale faces are rapidly fading into oblivion and in their stead fine old shades of copper appear. Some nose ever, continue to represent an Italian sunset at its best.

Apparently the craze for fine clothes has subsided, for nothing new, not even a collar, has been purchased this week.

In the Arena Hockey Club succeeds disposing of the Victorias of Montreal in the big hockey game at the Arena tonight, the locals can feel well assured that they have beaten the best amateur team that ever came here from across the border.

The Aberdeens of Ottawa, rated as the leading amateur team in Canada until the Nationals so seem beat them, fell before the Arena seven, 2 to 0, but this match, as good as it was, was not in a class with the sensational 2-2 tie between the Arena and Vics last week. The teams battled through 70 minutes of hockey time with the Canadians requesting that time be called because of an important game they had out in Montreal two days later.

During the first and second periods a collection will be taken up for the benefit of the Canadian soldiers at the front. A German flag will be injected into the program, however, when Herr and Fraulein Muller of Berling give an exhibition of fancy skating.

BAKER EXPECTS TO PLAY.

New York, March 19.—Hobey Baker expects to be in the game tonight and followers of the Lee St. Nicholas seven are confident Boston A. A. will be played in their Amateur Hockey League game at St. Nicholas Rink.

Baker went through 56 minutes of hockey time with the Canadians requesting that time be called because of an important game they had out in Montreal two days later.

During the first and second periods a collection will be taken up for the benefit of the Canadian soldiers at the front. A German flag will be injected into the program, however, when Herr and Fraulein Muller of Berling give an exhibition of fancy skating.

The Melrose High seven, hockey champions of the Interscholastic League, were given a battle royal by the plucky English High team, in their title battle at the Arena last night, and Norwell, Leavitt & Company only won out, 3-2. This was much a tighter tally than had been looked for, as Melrose was considered a certain winner. Joe Lavin was English High's star. He shot both goals for his side, while Leavitt and Filmore were the tally getters for Melrose.

MARLING AND JAMES EXCEL AT TRIALS

W. J. Marling, Huntington School, and Rev. James, Brookline A. C., showed splendid form at the junior A. A. U. swimming trials in the R. Y. C. A. tank last night, and each excelled upon winning laurels at the coming title meet in Chicago. Marling equaled the 50-2-56, made by Cann at the trials of the New York squad and eclipsed Harlow's New York trial of 1m. 21 4-5s. in the 100-yard breast stroke event. James placed the second heat to his credit, and bettered Marling's time by one-fifth of a second. Max Undersee finished first in the 100-yard back stroke, Elliot Cagren, New England's outdoor champion, landed in front in the diving contest, with Francis Jouanette second. Don Richardson, the fifteen-year-old schoolboy, had an easy time of it in the 500-yard race.

Lewis in Tris' Garden Bill Names New Lineup

By HERMAN NICKERSON.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., March 18.—No word has come from the Boston office of the Red Sox concerning the statement recently made by Tris Speaker at his home at Hubbard City., Tex., that he did not intend to report at the Springs tomorrow. President Lannin has not sent a line to Manager Carrigan and there the matter rests.

When told that Tris had declared himself as not intending to stand the cut in his salary, Carrigan said:

"Well, if that is so, and Tris is not going to report, then it is up to me to build my team for such an emergency. I will probably move Duffy Lewis into centre field, keeping Hooper in right owing to the sunfield in Boston. Then I have Shorten, Henriksen and Gainer for left field."

However, Manager Carrigan is not particularly disturbed by the statement of the Texan. Of course, there are many days yet before the training trip closes and, as Speaker has been visiting the various camps in Texas, he appears to be interested in the game, even though his salary has been cut.

It would not be surprising if he came on here before the team leaves, for under present conditions there isn't much of a future for Speaker aside from what he can get out of the farm he recently purchased and what money he could pick up playing independent ball.

RED SOX NOTES

By HERMAN NICKERSON.

Hot Springs, Ark., March 18.—Dr. C. Mulslow Green is carrying a little Boston terrier pup along for company. The dog wears a sweater and is a big hit with the entire portion of the Majestic Hotel's guests.

"Dutch" Leonard is strong for Braves Field as a ball park. "Isn't that the swellest place in the world to play ball on?" he asked the other day. "Why, with that outfield of ours, Tris, Duffy and Harry, I'm told, he can shoot out there on a line and in between them or over their heads it's never not to be handled.

Jim McDonough takes the walk to the park and back, being content with that form of exercise.

So far the work has kept the men from the Oaklawn race track. This is probably a good thing for their pocketbooks.

The only form of gaming going on is the innocent game of hearts at a nickel a point.

FLETCHER TO LEAD DEAN.

Franklin, March 18.—Arthur C. Fletcher, Erie, Pa., ball back on last Fall's Penn eleven, has been elected Captain of the 1916 team. He will enter Brown in 1917.

Regatta Saved for Old Course; Sat., June 17

By DR. WALTER PEET.

New York, March 18.—The "Poughkeepsie regatta" will be rowed at Poughkeepsie, as usual—not on Cayuga Lake. The date for this great aquatic event is Saturday, June 17, and the time is somewhere around 5 o'clock in the afternoon, one hour after the tide has began to ebb around old Krum Elbow.

Morton G. Bogue, chairman of the stewards of the Intercollegiate Rowing Association, and the head of Columbia rowing, broke the deadlock as to date and place that has obtained all Winter. Columbia, Cornell and Pennsylvania constitute the Intercollegiate Rowing Association which was organized in 1895. All other participants at Poughkeepsie come by invitation.

The hitch was this: The only available Saturday, June 10, on which the current will run down stream late in the afternoon, is June 17 and July 1. June 24 the proper current for the race will be running shortly after noon, and this hour, for obvious reasons, would be precluded.

Everybody wanted July 1, but the West Shore railroad refused to run the observation train on that day on account of the big outward July 4 rush on excursion trains on the Saturday before the holiday.

BRAVES SIGN CATCHER.

Boston, March 18.—Manager Stallings announced today that Catcher Ray Powell had been signed to a contract by the Braves. Powell is a product of the Texas League, and was with Houston last season.

BASEBALL BRIEFS.

Jack Barry, former Boston American second baseman, has been appointed baseball coach at Princeton University.

Ed Reulbach, Brooklyn pitcher, has been signed to a contract by the Braves. Reulbach is a product of the Texas League, and was with Houston last season.

Start Suits Carrigan Regulars Due Sunday

By HERMAN NICKERSON.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., March 18.—When the World's Champions' infielders and outfielders get here tomorrow they will find a bunch of pitchers and catchers ready and waiting for them to get into the game. This goes also for the condition of Janvrin and Hoblitzel.

Henriksen has been the hard luck kid so far, having had a transom fall over his head, the glass cutting his lip. That was several days ago. Then, in yesterday's practice, he made a flying leap for the ball and knocked three boards out of the centre field fence with his left shoulder.

To make it real good, Ruth cut loose a wild one, hitting Olaf on the left arm. "Hennie" is all right otherwise and takes his work just as if he hadn't been made the punching bag of late.

The cool weather has given place to the same days experienced on their first workout; a hot sun, with hardly any wind at all, a fast field and diamond. If any club in either league has anything more it has what may be called extras.

"BILL" KEEPING CLOSE WATCH.

Manager Carrigan is certainly master of the situation. He does not make much noise on the field, nor is he very much in evidence as far as the spotlight is concerned, but when it comes to knowing what is going on he is there with both feet.

A few days ago several of the players cut their trampy over the mountain trail a little bit short, so as to get out to the race track.

The next day there wasn't a chance in the world for them to get away, as Carrigan kept the practice going until past the hour when they could have made the races. This was with no attempt to tell she boys where they got off; just an object lesson which was heeded.

This training trip means work and plenty of it if what the battery men have been through stands forth as any criterion.

It may sound like a joke game, played between teams made up as they were, but in my opinion it did a great deal to keep the interest alive, and from the way the boys fought there is to be plenty of rivalry when they really do line up for the practice stuff.

PRACTICE BATTLES HELP.

Warming up, pitching to the batters, hitting and running them out, chasing fly balls and taking a stab at infield work, with bunting practice, gets rather monotonous after about a week. This was the case when Bill started those worse than Vanagaii contests.

Now the boys are telling each other things, and they all tend toward making the pitchers and catchers get into the fielding end of the game from the very start.

Carrigan was on first during the initial work, putting the pitchers through the "covering first" stunt, which is one of the most valuable things in a pitcher's position, aside from the stuff he possesses.

Bill spilt the squad, having Hoblitzel, Janvrin, Scott-Gleen and a few of the twirlers bunt the ball, pulling it in toward first, where the pitcher would be on the spot and ready to

MORAN IS RIGHT THERE

Title-Chaser Trails Hon. St. Patrick Having Birthday—He Is 29 Years Old Today.

By FRANK MORAN,
Challenger for the World's Heavyweight Title.

NEW YORK, March 18.—Yesterday was St. Patrick's Day and today is my birthday anniversary. I missed being born on the day of days by a little over an hour. At least, that is what my folks told me. At any rate, I like to think I was born on St. Patrick's Day, for my folks are Irish.

Twenty-nine years old, and yet I feel like a kid of eighteen. A fellow in perfect health, physical condition and happy could not feel otherwise, irrespective of his age.

There were times when I imagined I was not happy, but I have been fairly successful of late. However, think of the seven long years of privation and hardship I went through.

WHEN HE DIDNT COLLECT.

I boxed Jack Johnson on the other side and received no compensation. I boxed Luther McCarthy at Madison Square Garden a few years ago and received no pay. I went into the ring that night with a broken arm and gave the crowd my best.

My best is what the crowd gets whenever I go into the ring. There were times—and many of them—when I was underpaid. But I bided my time. The big chance has come and a week from tonight I am going to make the best of it. I shall give the crowd my best. Also Mr. Willard.

I confined my training yesterday to a six-mile run. Willie Lewis, my trainer, and my manager, Harry Kendall, Bill McKinnon and Bartley Madden, accompanied me. We raced a good part of the way and the condition of my wind and legs made it possible for me to leave them far behind.

LIGHT WORK IN GYM.

When I came in from the road I capped off the run with a brisk rubdown. Through with this, I put in a strenuous quarter of an hour with the weights, punching bag and skipping rope, with the idea of limbering up still further. I decided not to put on the gloves, so in the afternoon Lewis and myself took in a show by way of diversion.

I have spoken of almost everything in my story for the International News Service. Everything I had to say about my bout with Willard I have said. There is very little more of importance to tell. I have told you why I think I am going to win, and told everything about my condition and training methods.

I shall resume my training bouts this afternoon and because of my splendid condition I am going at my partners with a zest. Tomorrow morning I intend to motor out to Stamford, Ct., after a run on the roads.

I do not think I shall put on the gloves. Lewis tells me he wants me to reserve my energy for my work next week.

LEONARD LETS K. O. FLY IN 7TH ROUND

New York, March 18.—Benny Leonard, the rising young New York lightweight, knocked out Shamus O'Brien in the seventh round at the Harlem Sporting Club last night. When the finish came, poor Shamus was lying on the ropes, in his own corner, dead to the world. In the final round O'Brien was floored three times.

New York, Saturday, March 18.

IT was close to 8 o'clock when I tumbled out of the sheets and donned my heavy walking outfit. Monahan and Hemple were waiting and we went out for a long walk. There was no occasion for breaking out into a trot, as real hard morning work is unnecessary.

It was forty minutes later when we returned to the Colonial and prepared for some hard indoor work. As soon as I got into my ring costume I started off doing a few exercises. My first venture was bending down and touching the floor with the palms of both my hands. This went on for about ten minutes; just enough to limber up all my arm and leg muscles.

When that was over I started on the arm work—moving both arms as far back as I could—and kept it up for five minutes. For the next fifteen minutes I did shadow-boxing. This is something that I will do daily until the day of the fight.

Jess' Breakfast Anything But a Feast.

At the completion of my work I took a warm bath and then was treated to a fine massage. This being finished it was a case of dress and march to the table. I just drank a couple of glasses of hot water, had two soft boiled eggs and a glass of milk and called it a feast.

The weather was so brisk, that after loafing around half an hour I went out for another stroll. Around 10 o'clock I returned to the hotel and then dug through my mail and read the papers.

The time between my return from the walk and starting for the Pioneer Club passed quickly. About 1:30 we made tracks for the club to go through our daily work. Hemple did not feel like boxing. Poor Jack's face needed a rest, he claimed. A newcomer, Jack Broad, showed up and wanted to put on the gloves, so I gave him the opportunity.

Before we started in boxing I gave the pulleys a little work and then did a little bag punching to sharpen the eye. Then Rodel climbed into the ring and we were off. George forced me to keep moving about lively. He then took up the gage, but before we had gone a round I hit him a sharp blow on the nose and the blood began to flow. That ended the bout.

Session in Gym the Banner One to Date.

Monahan followed and for the next six minutes I was as busy as a bird dog ducking and sidestepping his wallops. These five rounds tuned me up nicely, however, so when Rodel stepped in for the sixth and final round it was a corking go.

Rodel always fights when he puts on the gloves and this time he didn't change his tactics. The left is the Boer's best wallop and, since he joined the camp I have been satisfied I have hopped away from enough lefts to make that blow a nonentity if Moran shoots any my way.

After the boxing ended I went through the body bending exercises on a chair and that performance wound up the day's work. With the day's work finished it left me in corking shape and tuned up a notch higher for the battle. There is not the slightest thing for me to worry about so far as I can see.

Yelle's Manager Quits Tells of Hip. Trouble

E. E. Moore of Pawtucket, R. I., who has been managing Freddie Yelle, claimant of the New England lightweight championship by virtue of his victory over Matty Baldwin early in the Winter, writes the AMERICAN stating he has washed his hands of that young gentleman.

Yelle was to have boxed Frankie Mack of Cambridge at the Armory A. A., Hippodrome, last Tuesday night. The bout fizzled when Mack came in over weight, and that though Moore and Yelle agreed to allow him to make 135 pounds, three pounds over the division's outside limit, and at 9 p. m., too. Yelle refused to go on, and thus it was Walter Butler, the Cuban Rocket, was pressed into service and got the general recognition long denied him by "shilling in" and holding his own in their twelve-round encounter.

Portions of Moore's letter to the AMERICAN follow:

"Some of all I blame Firpo, Mack's manager, for the real trouble—over weight. He failed to make his forfeit, showing he did not intend to make weight. He figured that rather than disappoint the crowd Yelle would go on and beat him. This is exactly what Yelle did not do.

"Secondly, I consider Yelle was the one to blame for the trouble which came after Mack's failure to make weight. Yelle first refused to box owing to Mack's failure to fulfil his agreement. Then he wanted extra money to go through. The club agreed to his terms, and to guard against Fred losing the decision, agreed to have the bout called a draw if both boys were on their feet at the close.

"Even then Yelle was not satisfied after having all those concessions made him, as he insisted on having a foolish announcement made to the crowd, which he declared was in order to protect his friends from losing the few cigars, or something of the like, they had bet. The club right-fully refused to do such a ridiculous thing for the benefit of the select few. Then, and then only, Yelle declared he would refuse to go on unless he could see him box and take a chance of winning for them by doing some real fighting, though he had better not fight. I have handled Yelle for the past two years, and have had a long string of them, but never before have I had to contend with such a proposition. Yelle was a comparatively good boy when I got him, but he was a confirmed believer in the fact that he was a wonder and could do no wrong. He also appreciated what the Armory A. A. had done for him when it gave him the chance to make a name for himself by boxing two such celebrities of the ring as Champion Jeff Smith of Baynton, N. J., and Jimmy Clabby of Chicago, and the scarcely less inferior, Charley White. Yet he did—not.

"When I advised Yelle to go on and take the forfeit which the club wished to give him, I really believed that he would beat Mack in spite of the weight disadvantage and be returned the victor. I would not have advised him to go on if it was going to be such a handicap as he appeared to think it would be. He knew that, and still, rather than stick by me and the club, he refused to fight. Just because he claimed it wasn't right to his friends. As a result of all concerned, either, or what error—it may wish to call it, I wish to say I have severed all connections with him.

FIGHT HOUSE HAS GONE OVER $100,000

New York, March 18.—The advance sale for the Moran-Willard fight has crossed the $100,000 mark, according to the promoters. The $5 and $2 seats will be placed on sale Thursday. Not more than two of these seats will be sold to any one person in line.

WINTER'S BANNER GAMES

A. A. U. Indoor Championships Carded for New York Tonight. Ted Meredith Won't Start.

NEW YORK, March 18.—The annual indoor track and field championships of the A. A. U. of the United States will be held in the Twenty-second Regiment Armory tonight.

The 60-yard sprint has attracted an unusually attractive entry. Four colored boys, considered the best in the world, will match strides against the best white sprinters.

The Ethioplans are Howard P. Drew, University of California; Roy Morse, Salem Crescent A. C.; Irving Howe and Sol Butler, Dubuque College. It will be the latter's first Eastern appearance.

Butler holds the world's interscholastic record for 60 yards. He is a good hurdler and an excellent running broad jumper. In the latter event he has been credited with 24 feet 5½ inches. This lad will be seen in action in three events, the 20 and 60-yard dashes and 70-yard high hurdles, against Joe Loomis of Chicago A. C., Jack J. Eller and Dave Pollitzer, Irish-American A. C., Arthur Engles, New York A. C., and Frank Stephenson, Trinity Club.

The 600-yard run is the banner event. The entries include Bingham and Wilcox, Harvard; Joe Higgins, Holy Cross; Dave Caldwell and Tom Hoipin, Boston A. A.; Earl Rhey and Homer Baker, unattached. Tom Meredith will not start.

Loomis will also be seen in the running high jump. He will have his work cut out for him, as he will have to show exceptional form to vanquish such stars as Barwise, Boston A. A.; Wesley Oler, Yale, the intercollegiate champion; Richard Cornell, and Taylor, Irish-American A. C.

The two-mile walk will be a one-sided affair, with George H. Goulding, Central Walkers Club, Toronto, as a starter. He is in a class by himself. John Overton, Yale, will toe the mark with Hanner Kolehmainen in the two-mile run. This will be their first meeting.

EXETER CAPTAIN LEAVES.

Exeter, N. H., March 18.—J. W. Peters of Providence, R. I., captain elect of Exeter's baseball nine, has resigned his position. What's more, he has left the academy. Peters plans entering Yale next Fall. He was one of the mainstays of the Exeter line the past two years and captained the 1915 team.

LEARY TO JOIN HOOSIERS.

Jack Leary of Waltham, who played with the St. Louis Browns the past two seasons, left yesterday for Altoona, Pa., where he joins the Indianapolis (American Association) squad. Fielder Jones released him to the Hoosiers early in the Winter.

RING RESULTS

St. Paul, Minn., March 18.—Mike Gibbons of St. Paul was given the decision over Demetrius Illion in his somewhat slow ten-round bout with Jeff Smith at Bayonne, N. J.

Milwaukee, Wis., March 17.—Fred Fulton, the Rochester, Minn., giant, knocked Jim Flynn in the second round of their scheduled ten-round bout here last night.

Syracuse, N. Y., March 18.—After "flattening" Leroy of New York ran up a big early lead on Bob Devere at the Rink A. C., the latter closed strong and got in some telling blows in the final rounds.

Roswell, March 18.—"Kid Archer" Brown, the Malden lightweight, decisively bested Gordon Brooks of Roswell in their ten-round go-set at the Moody A. C. Brown scored two knockdowns.

Philadelphia, March 18.—Harry Baker of Wilmington, Del., had the better of Ralph Kroe in their six-round bout at the Nonpareil A. C.

Northampton, March 18.—Leo Johnson of New York and Eddie Dorner of Philadelphia put up a fast twelve-round draw at the Meadow City A. C.

Brockton, March 18.—St. Patrick's T. A. B. amateur winners: I. Weisel, Providence, 108-pound class; Joe Duffy, Boston, 115-pound class; Sam Dowd, South Boston, 175-pound class.

John L. Sullivan Joins Experts Writing on Willard-Moran Fight

JESS WILLARD, boxing champion of the world, will meet Frank Moran, a serious contender for the title, in a ten-round contest in New York city March 25. It is a battle of international interest, Willard's first ring engagement since he defeated Jack Johnson in Cuba last April.

The Boston American is giving you the very best reports obtainable on the conditioning of the men and the events leading up to the big mill.

Willard is writing special articles daily on his training and his plans for retaining the title.

Moran is also giving the American readers exclusive stories from his camp.

John L. Sullivan, "the greatest of all ring champions," has joined the American sporting staff and he has written his opinion of the coming championship battle. This will be printed in tomorrow's Boston Sunday American.

DADMUN ORDERS WORK

Harvard's New Football Captain States Spring Practice Will Start About April 1.

HARRIE H. DADMUN, '17, of Arlington, Harvard's newly elected football leader, succeeding to the throne vacated by the enforced withdrawal from college of J. Atherton Gilman, Jr., is today in receipt of congratulations from many well wishers.

The young giant is anxious to have the coaching situation clarified at Cambridge and hopes to see Percy D. Haughton in active charge all Fall during the 1916 season.

In the interim Dadmun is preparing for the spring practice, which will start about April 1, weather conditions permitting. Either Len Leary or Charley Brickley is expected to be on hand to do the best part of the coaching.

Dadmun played his first game at Arlington High three years ago. Then he chose Tufts, where he played mediocre football at best, and the following year transferred to Harvard. Because of the rule governing transfers Dadmun found he was not able to play football until last Fall, when he was rushed to a regular berth at guard. He had played a whale of a game and was picked by many of the experts to hold down All-American guard position next season.

Dadmun's popularity was Dadmun's greatest asset in winning the election. Harrie, his nearest rival, withdrawing and thus making Dadmun's election unanimous.

Manager N. W. Burbidge states that the Harvard baseball team will play at least one game against Yale next November, says Laurie Curtis, captain of the Yale nine, Gilman and Dadmun participated in the election. Several members of the team, including Curtis, Gilman, Dadmun and C. Watson, were missing, but they were represented by proxies.

Dadmun enters his senior year at Harvard next Fall. He is twenty-one years old and weighs in the vicinity of 190 pounds and is six feet tall.

Grace Darling's Talks to Girls

No. 7—The Art of Conversation

By Grace Darling,
Who Has Won National Recognition as a Moving Picture Star.

WE girls need more words. No, that isn't a joke, nor is it funny. It's a sad fact.

We talk a plenty, but we use the same words over and over again until the poor things are all worn out, and frayed around the edges, and back-broken, and generally played out.

And half the time the word we are using was no more intended to express what we are trying to say than a crochet needle was designed to dig the Panama Canal with. That's the real reason we take refuge in slang. The only words we know are so pitifully inadequate to express what we are trying to convey that we seize upon the first handy crutch that we can lay our tongues to.

You never realize how poverty-stricken we are in the matter of a vocabulary until you listen to the chatter of a lot of girls and observe how they overwork some one or two words.

For instance, I know a girl who would be stricken absolutely dumb if she were suddenly deprived of the word "cute." In one breath she will tell you that a doll or a baby is cute. In the next she will say that Niagara Falls are cute.

Last Summer I was riding with her in Central Park, in New York, and she asked me if I didn't think that the Obelisk was cute, and that it was cute of the Egyptian government to have presented it to us, and the cutest thing that ever was for the Park Commissioners to have placed it just where they did.

HERE'S ANOTHER WORD

Another girl I know pins her conversational faith to the word "fierce." She will tell you that the fighting in the trenches in France is fierce, and that the ice cream at dinner was fierce, and the price of chocolate creams has become something fierce, or that her new pink evening dress is the fiercest thing she ever saw.

Still another girl I know finds the word "swell" a life line to which she clings desperately in every emergency. She will tell you that they had the swellest pie for dinner, that her favorite actor is perfectly swell, or that she has just been to the swellest play, or that the papers have an account of the swellest case of starvation she ever heard of, or that she is reading the swellest book.

Now these girls are not stupid. They are not ignorant. They are not lacking in discernment. They are merely lacking in words. They have not enough words at their command which to express the things they feel and perceive.

It is this same lack of vocabulary that makes people so often say the wrong thing to us, and offend us when they mean to please. For example, did you ever watch the scowl on an artist's face when some well-meaning but worthless person told him that his picture in which he had tried to paint the agony of a soul in torment, was "so pretty"?

THE VALUE OF WORDS

And a woman novelist, who has written a story that is a great, tragic epic from me that she feels the compelling murder every time anybody tells her that her book is "sweet."

Grace Darling, moving picture star, famed for beauty as well as talent

The real secret of flattery is to find out the particular adjective that people like to have applied to them, and then use it where it will do the most good.

But we can't do this unless we have a large and flexible vocabulary, and so I urge you girls to make a resolution now to add a new word each day to your store of words, and the best way to do this is to follow the advice that the poet Longfellow gave Mary Anderson when she asked him how to acquire a large vocabulary of exquisite words. He told her to learn a verse of poetry every day.

Isn't it silly to go through life hampered for a lack of words when there's a whole dictionary full of them, free to us all, and to be had for the taking?

The Manicure Lady

She Discourses on Cleopatra and the Real Romance

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

"WHO was Mister Hannibal?" asked the Manicure Lady.

"I don't know him," said the Head Barber. "I used to know a Hannibal out in Missouri, but it can't be him."

"No, the Mister Hannibal I mean has been dead thousands of years," said the Manicure Lady. "The old sink that was just in here having his nails did was telling me about him. He was a general or a corporal or something."

"He couldn't have been much," said the Head Barber, "or I would have heard of him."

"Of course you would," said the Manicure Lady. "You and all the rest of them great men is such thick pals. This is the first time I ever asked you anything, George, and seen you fall down on the answer.

"The Mister Hannibal I mean crossed them Alp Mountains and scared the life out of a lot of them old Romans, the old gink told me. He said Hannibal was a great leader of men."

DOUBTS

"I don't know," said the Head Barber. "Tell me more about Hannibal. He must have been some guy if he could scare them old Romans. The Missus has got a pretty good education, and she told me once the old Romans nearly conquered the world."

"That's what they done, George," said the Manicure Lady. "They went along licking their foes and making them like it. They would have captured Egypt if Mister Antony hadn't went and fell in love with Queen Cleopatra. I remember that much from my school books.

"Cleopatra was a peach, and she was a fine dresser, too, being a queen and having a lot of them modistes to boss around, and when poor Mark Antony first set his lamps on her it was all off.

"He fell in love so he forgot all his business dates, and when the other Romans came to fight, her and him done the Dutch, as they say at Harvard and Yale. It was awful sad, but I think it was kind of romantic, though. Goodness knows, George, if I had a sweet heart that was going to kill himself, I would be game to go along."

"Don't talk foolish," said the Head Barber. "As the old poet once said, life is real and the grave's not the cemetery, or something like that. I don't like the undertakers well enough to give them any of my dough."

THE ROMANCE OF IT

"But it must have been kind of romantic to say farewell to this cruel world together," insisted the Manicure Lady. "Men was real men in them days, and love meant something more than scrambled eggs for breakfast and a delicatessen dinner at night. On the square, George, there ain't enough real romance in this whole big city to make one short novel."

"Folks is kind of getting onto romance," said the Head Barber. "Romance is a beautiful thing, but it ain't a sticker like true friendship. A true friend will lend you money. Romance will come along and borrow it from you so quick you'll forget how you got hold of it."

"Thank goodness, I ain't that warped in my nature," exclaimed the Manicure Lady. "I'm strong for romance."

"I know," said the Head Barber, "but you ain't married, and I am."

"That's when I am going to be the most romantic," said the Manicure Lady. "Romance for me, and finance for my husband."

Anecdotes of the Famous

Lord Lansdowne is a witty raconteur, although most of his jokes have a political flavor. One of his pet tales concerns a political meeting at a country village in Ireland.

"Has any gentleman any questions to ask?" inquired the chairman, looking around upon the assembled audience.

A man thereupon got up to ask something when a partisan of the speakers on the platform instantly knocked him down with a club.

"Has any other gentleman any questions to ask?" said the chairman blandly; but as no other gentleman had, the motion before the meeting was declared as "carried unanimously."

King George was once enjoying the hospitality of a prominent peer at his country seat near the scene of one of Cromwell's historic battles. Strolling out one day by himself, the King met the village blacksmith returning from a shooting expedition.

"I say, my good fellow," said His Majesty, genially, "I understand there was a big battle fought somewhere about here."

"Well—er," stammered the blacksmith, recognizing and saluting the King, "I did see a round or two with Bill, t'e gutman, but I didn't know Your Maiesty had heard of it."

An old tenant on Queen Victoria's Balmoral estate used to be greatly concerned when the Queen went driving on Sunday afternoons. She even ventured to speak about it. The Queen, who allowed a good many liberties to her tenantry, smiled, and said to the old woman:

"But, Janet, the New Testament tells us distinctly that the Sabbath was made for man."

"Aye," said Janet, severely, "I know it does; and I think none the more of the New Testament for that."

Mary Garden related the other day a good story as showing the forwardness of the modern American girl.

"A young lady in Philadelphia," she said, "had an uncle who had grown immensely rich, and he promised to visit her for the first time in seventeen years.

"A day or two before his arrival she wrote to him as follows:

"'It will be glorious to see you again, dear uncle. I will meet you at the station on your arrival. But I might not recognize you after all these years, and so I think it would be best for you to hold, for purposes of identification, a long string of pearls in the left hand, and a bit of fur—such as an ermine-lined sable stole, for example—in the right.'"

Their Married Life

Warren Plays a Practical Joke on Helen, Very Much to Her Disgust

Copyright, 1916, by International News Service.

"I AM so glad to see you, dear," said Babbie, running out into the snow that was drifted high on the porch. "Tom and I were coming to meet you at first, but somehow the fire on the hearth and the coziness of the room were too much for us and we were too lazy. Why didn't you come earlier?"

"We did intend to come earlier," said Helen, running lightly upstairs, "but Warren had to stay at the office and so I was disappointed. Oh, Babbie, you have things changed up here."

"Do you like it? I was simply tired to death of my room the other way. Do you like the draperies? And how do you like my dressing table? Tom made it for me out of some old boxes."

Helen looked admiringly at the dainty affair, with its dotted Swiss curtains and its array of toilet things. It was built into the wall, and a white, enameled mirror hung overhead. "I wouldn't believe that such an attractive thing could be made," exclaimed Helen. "Imagine Warren building anything like that for me!"

Even Babbie smiled at this remark. It would seem funny to have Warren doing odd jobs about the house. He never thought of making little personal sacrifices for Helen, although he was always perfectly willing to pay for things that had to be done.

After they were all four seated before the snapping logs, waiting for dinner to be announced, the conversation became divided. Babbie and Helen talked household trifles, and Tom and Warren became engrossed in sports. Helen confided to Babbie she never could understand why men liked to read the sporting pages.

Tom and Warren disappeared shortly before they went into the dining room, and, although Helen noticed nothing out of the ordinary when they reappeared, both looked sheepish. Babbie had a new colored maid, and Helen was interested in observing her method of waiting. Moreover, Helen was never looking for trouble, and, sensitive as she was practical herself, could be pitiless on her without the slightest suspicion on her part.

Baked oysters were brought on first, and they were so delicious that all four ate a little more than usual of them. As Babbie rang for the plates to be removed, Helen raised her glass of water to her lips. She might have noticed that her glass was different from the others, but it happened that she was not conscious of anything strange until she felt an alarming cold stream running down her chin and trickling down to her throat.

Even then she suspected nothing, thinking that perhaps the glass had been filled to overflowing and she had tipped it up too suddenly. In consequence, she raised it again, and a little further trial showed that it ejaculated a fine stream of water, or, rather, several fine streams, pouted down the front of her shirt waist, drenching her and making her gasp. A smothered giggle from Warren made her turn to him, only to discover that both he and Tom were endeavoring to restrain their laughter. So it was a trick.

HELEN RESENTS THE TRICK

Helen was speechless with anger and with mortification. She was too angry to speak for a moment, and then Warren spoke and Tom laughed openly.

"Come, Helen, be a sport; it was only a joke."

"Yes, Warren would do it," said Tom. "I told him not to," and then he laughed again. Helen was a funny sight, with her cheeks burning and her chin and throat glistening with water. The water on her shirtwaist had soaked through to her skin, and she shivered a little.

"Tom, how could you do such a thing?" said Babbie indignantly. "It was very rude, and I wouldn't blame Helen if she were furious at both of you."

"It doesn't really matter at all," said Helen, recovering her composure and brushing the water away with her napkin. "Of course it was a joke." And then she looked ruefully down at her wet shirtwaist.

"I knew it was a joke, but I am not fond of jokes of that kind," said Babbie, her eyes flashing as they met Tom's across the table.

Warren continued to regard the entire thing as too funny for anything but laughter, and he was still laughing immoderately.

"Remember the night we played it on one of the boys with cider?" Tom said, to make the joke general. "The joke was on us," he explained to Helen. "You see, the top of the glass is perforated, and the cider was too thick to run through the holes, so nothing happened."

"Well, this will be the last time such a thing will happen if I know anything about it," said Babbie indignantly. "Margaret," she said to the maid who appeared at this minute, "take Mrs. Curtis' glass out and bring her a goblet. Throw that glass in the ash can, will you? And be sure that it breaks."

THE END OF THE GLASS

"Oh, see here, Babbie," said Tom, recovering suddenly from his mirth. "Don't break it; we can have lots of fun with the thing."

"No, Tom Bell," said Babbie severely, "you have played your last joke with that glass, that is final."

"See that's a shame, old fellow," said Warren; "and it's my fault, too. It's tough to make you lose the thing. Honestly, Babbie, it was all my fault," he persisted.

"Too late now," said Babbie severely, as Margaret placed another glass at Helen's place. "Would you like to change your waist, dear? you can find one of mine, and this one will dry while you are eating."

Helen fell the front of her waist. "No, it isn't bad enough for that, thank you. I will stay warm when we are sitting in front of the fire."

"Sure you won't take cold?" questioned Babbie.

"Of course, dear; don't worry."

Helen was frankly hurt at Warren's inconsiderate action. He had done it for a joke, of course, but he had not stopped to think of just how uncomfortable it might be for her. Of course, if more people had been present he would have done it just the same, regardless of Helen's feelings, and that was what hurt. Helen did not blame Tom at all. He probably could do nothing with Warren. The best thing for her to do was to treat the entire affair in fun. Nevertheless, she was hurt to the thing Warren could be so thoughtless.

(Another incident in this human series will appear here soon.)

How Do You Walk?

IT is conceded by men who have given scientific thought to the subject that longevity is regarded by rambles. There are different kinds of walking. The man who walks to his office in the morning with his mind fixed on what he expects to find when he gets to his desk, or who plans on the way what he intends to do before the day is over, doesn't walk. And if he returns afoot with the reflections of the day still engrossing his mind, he doesn't walk.

One of the students of the practice of walking, Dr. Louis Welzmiller, physical director of the Young Men's Christian Association in New York, has his own some ideas on the sort of walking we have in mind. Energize your gait, is his idea. Lift up your head, look the world squarely in the face, and smile when you do it. If you have not the natural habit of smiling, look pleasant. Do not lean backward. Do not walk alone if you can have a congenial friend to keep you company.

There is no rule as to distance. Every walker must decide that for himself. But if he walks systematically all this will unfold itself. Age has nothing to do with walking if a man is not a cripple or an invalid. Some of the best walkers in the country are men who have passed the age of seventy years. Where possible, the walking should be done in the country, or off the paved streets of the city. If a lean man wants to get fat, he can help get himself to that point by studying himself in walking, and if he is fat and wants to get the surplus adipose tissue reduced, he will soon come to that by walking in a manner which will dictate how he should proceed.

Followed Instructions

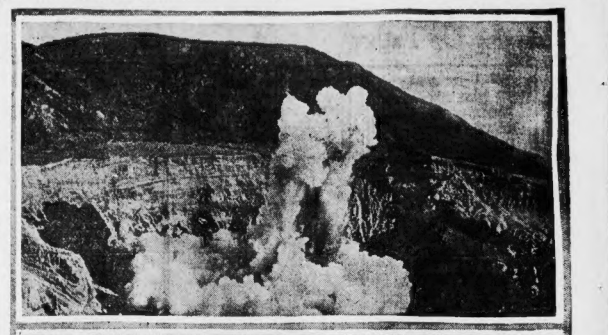
The ship's doctor of an English liner notified the steward that a man had died in stateroom 45. The usual instructions to bury the body was given. Some hours later the doctor peeped into the room and found that the body was still there. He called the steward's attention to the matter, and the latter replied:

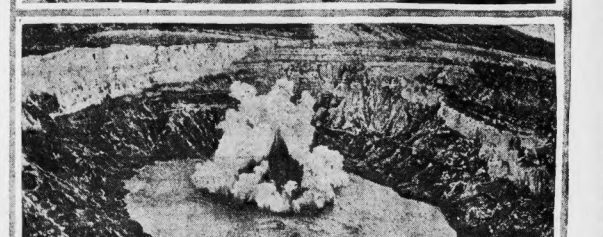
"I thought you said room 45. I went to that room and noticed was of thim in a buck. 'Are ye dead?' says I. 'No,' says he, 'but I'm pretty near dead.'

"So I buried him."

The Secret of the Volcano

By Garrett P. Serviss





Two views of Mt. Poas, a Costa Rica volcano, in action, the beginning of the eruption; the upper was taken later.

NATURE is the great maker and user of explosives. But her dynamite is steam. With it she can wreck a world. In the face of the moon we see the aspect of a little planet which has been wrecked in that manner. Nature's exploding boilers are volcanoes.

The gaunt frames of dead volcanoes of gigantic size cover the face of the moon, but their motive force is gone because the moon no longer has either free water or sufficient internal heat to turn water into steam. She looks like a moonscape of Verdun that, ages ago, was subjected to a storm of shells a billion times mightier than any that Krupp's biggest guns can hurl.

The earth has both, and consequently it has active volcanoes. This is the earliest, and, upon the whole, the most consistent and probable explanation of volcanic action. All the active volcanoes are sufficiently near the sea to be within the probable range of percolating subterranean water. But some of the water no doubt comes from the rocks themselves. Still, there are no active volcanoes at great distances from the ocean.

Those found in the far interior of continents are mere dead shells. Telling of a time when they were animated by the gigantic force of steam, supplied from water sources now lacking.

Whether Vesuvius or Etna explodes with a furious eruption there are preliminary shakings, rumblings and subterranean groanings, which indicate the gathering of the forces in the blind vents of the volcano. If a steam engineer neglects his boiler, and allows its safety valve to become clogged, it will blow up.

If the fragments could fall back into the crater every blow-up and form a new obstruction to the gathering steam, there would be an endless series of explosions as long as the water lasted and the fires burned. So with a volcano; an eruption relieves the internal pressure and clears the volcanic pipes, but as soon as the outgush ceases the vents are reclosed, obstructive material presses in from all sides, and the imprisoned forces set to work to collect energy for another outburst.

MANY GASES AT WORK

Of course, there are other gases and vapors besides steam in the emanations of a volcano, but they are subsidiary to the steam, which furnishes the principal motive power. In addition to the flying fragments, the bombs, and the vast clouds of dust and vapor shot out of a volcano, are the floods of molten rock and hot mud that flow down the rent sides of the crater or force their way through the flanks of the mountain, but the uplifting force behind these is mainly that of imprisoned steam.

When the earth is practically dried up and has no more access to it will have no more volcanic eruptions. The planet Mars has nearly, if not quite, reached that condition, and no astronomer has ever seen a volcanic eruption on Mars, although with modern telescopes the effects of one as great as some we have had within the last thirty or forty years on the earth would be easily visible.

The black clouds filling thousands of square miles of the atmosphere would be seen forming and spreading, for the permanent surface of Mars is plainly visible. It repeats the story of the moon. As to Venus, we cannot tell with certainty because her solid surface, for some reason, is not clearly visible. Jupiter seems to be in a state of constant ebullition, like a boiling globe where nothing retains a permanent shape, except, perhaps, the strange region called "the great red spot."

A MODEL VOLCANO

There is on the earth a beautiful example of a kind of model volcano, from whose study the most interesting information about volcanic phenomena is obtained. It is the island of Stromboli in the Mediterranean sea, a sort of free school of volcanology. There, from time immemorial, frequent, and more or less regular, explosions have been going on. These eruptions are not severe enough to prevent observers from placing themselves on a slope of the mountain above the crater, which lies half down one side, and watching the working of the forces beneath.

Between eruptions the bottom of the crater, with its fiery cataracts, can be clearly inspected. Sometimes only steam is blown off; sometimes fragments of rocks are shot up with the stifling gases and vapors. Occasionally the molten matter in the crater is forced up to the lip. In the bottom of the crater three classes of apertures are seen, and the appearance of these, as described by Professor Judd, tells the whole story:

"From the largest apertures steam is emitted with loud, snorting puffs like those produced by a locomotive engine, but far less regular and rhythmical in their succession. In the second class of apertures masses of molten material are seen welling out, and from this steam is seen to escape. The openings of the third class present still more interesting appearances. A viscid, or semi-liquid, substance is seen slowly heaving up and down. The agitation increases gradually, and at last a gigantic bubble is formed, which violently bursts, when a great rush of steam takes place, carrying fragments of the scum-like surface high into the atmosphere."

The lower photograph shows Mt. Poas is 8,760 feet high.

Not Her Sort

After he had fallen upon his knees and kissed her hand she said:

"Before I answer 'Yes' or 'No,' there are some things I would like to ask you. Do you ever drink or gamble?"

"No," he eagerly replied. "I do not know what the taste of liquor is; I have never defiled my lips with tobacco. I have never uttered a profane word in my life. I have never even played bridge where a prize was at stake."

She looked at him thoughtfully for a moment, drew a long sigh, and then asked:

"Have you ever broken a woman's heart?

"Ah, how can you ask me that?" he almost reproachfully answered. "If I had ever spoken words of love to another I would not deem myself worthy to touch the hem of your garment. I have never cared for anyone but you. I have never kissed any woman except my mother. I have never given any girl cause to utter one sorrowful sigh. Yours is the first dear, soft little hand that I have ever held in my own. Never before tonight have I looked into any girl's eyes as I am looking into your deep, soulful eyes. Never——"

"Oh, dear," she impatiently interrupted, drawing her hand away from him, "it's after 8 o'clock, and you shouldn't be so far away from home at this hour of night. Wait a minute, please, and I'll see if I can't get my brother Tom to go with you. Your mamma must be terribly worried."

URGES HOSPITAL IN BOSTON FOR DRUG USERS

Dr. Herman M. Adler, chief of staff at the Psychopathic Hospital in Brookline, said today that he was strongly in favor of a special hospital in Boston for the treatment of persons addicted to the use of drugs and alcohol. Dr. Adler continued:

Such a hospital is sorely needed. I have come to the conclusion that victims of excessive use of narcotics and alcohol should be given careful and specialized treatment. When Boston and other cities equip a special hospital for these types of patients an effective step will have been taken to check both evils.

Under the law we are forbidden to accept confirmed drug users in the Psychopathic Hospital. On that account we have not been in a position of late to judge whether the drug evil has increased or decreased. We are tremendously interested, too, to learn developments in this connection.

URGES EXPERT TREATMENT.

I think the habit is largely a matter of oportunity. Personally I favor abrupt discontinuance of a drug in treating a patient. It is best for the patient and hastens the cure, but a general rule cannot be followed in this respect, though I understand this is what is invariably done at Deer Island and other penal institutions.

Some cases are more aggravated and require gradual curtailment of the drug until use can be entirely dispensed with. To cut off a drug suddenly from some inveterate users might result seriously and cause them to be violent.

However, it is all mental. They imagine they must obtain the drugs at any cost, or they will become insane or collapse. As a matter of fact, most users, abruptly deprived of a favorite narcotic on the spot, will not suffer any to speak of longer than forty-eight hours, and the general run feel better after twenty-four hours.

Patients should be given expert treatment, whether suffering from excessive use of drugs or intoxicants, and they should be under constant observation during the early treatment.

BIG TRAFFIC HERE YET.

It is during the first few days that the most critical stage is experienced. After that the treatment can be conducted with greater comfort to them.

A special hospital with a staff of specialists would meet a crying need. It would be a humane investment for a city. Something ought to be done for the unfortunates who are in the grip of the habit.

In spite of boasts by the police that the sale of drugs in Boston has been almost entirely limited to legal channels, it is no secret that large quantities of morphine, cocaine and heroin are constantly smuggled into Boston and sold at fancy prices in the South and West Ends.

Pocket peddlers, or "passers," as they are known in the underworld, are the chief agents of distribution, but certain physicians are also responsible for supplies on prescriptions.

The Harrison law has regulated drug prescriptions among reputable physicians, who have to record each drug prescription filled, but less reliable members of the profession appear still to connive with inveterate users.

SOCIETY PEOPLE VICTIMS.

Dr. J. Washington Hill, the colored physician of Columbus avenue, arrested and indicted in a big roundup of persons alleged by the Watch and Ward Society to have been active in the drug traffic, will be tried soon, with alleged confederates among them a druggist and clerk complained of as having filled Hill's prescriptions.

J. Frank Chase of the Watch and Ward Society, which trapped the Columbus avenue gang, made a statement at the time to the effect that fashionable men and women drove in automobiles to certain Columbus avenue houses and paid high prices for drugs that had been denied them by their family physicians ever since the Federal law went into effect.

It appears to be generally believed in police circles that evil associations alone many young men and women to use drugs, but that careless use of drugs in the treatment of patients, and laxity in prescribing on the part of physicians, have caused thousands to form the habit.

DOCTORS OFTEN TO BLAME.

District Attorney Joseph C. Pelletier, who ought to know, as he handles hundreds of cases in which drug users figure, claims doctors and druggists are often to blame. He said:

Many patients form the drug habit through taking drugs for nervous disorders, or while recovering from an operation. It would open the eyes of the good people of Boston if they saw the names of the prominent men and women on the books of Boston doctors who are slaves to different forms of drugs.

News of the big seizure of drugs by the Federal authorities in Detroit yesterday was received with pleasure in Boston by local and Federal officials.

Two American Plans for Full Preparedness

THE country is having its object lesson. Now we can get down to a sensible discussion of future preparedness.

One hundred and twenty-six years ago President Washington transmitted to the Congress, with his emphatic approval, a plan of preparedness drawn up by General Knox, then Secretary of War.

That plan has never been bettered. In essentials, it has been adopted in Australia and Switzerland. Hence it is frequently spoken of as the Swiss plan. It is not a Swiss plan at all. It is an American plan. But the Swiss had sense enough to adopt it, and we have not.

Briefly, General Knox proposed that all youths in their eighteenth and nineteenth years be given thirty days' military training in each of those years, and that during the twentieth year of age every youth shall be given ten days' military training—and that no able-bodied young man be permitted to vote or exercise any rights of a citizen until he had so served.

The purpose, of course, was to make EVERY ABLE-BODIED AMERICAN BOY capable of serving as a good citizen soldier in time of actual war, and so to establish a huge citizen military reserve INSTEAD OF A LARGE PROFESSIONAL STANDING ARMY.

Had we adopted this plan, we would not have this Mexican trouble on hand and would have no need to worry about Japan's ambitions and purposes.

As Mr. Hearst put it, in his signed editorial in the AMERICAN of October 28:

When one of the greatest German generals was asked why France was not invaded through Switzerland, instead bf through Belgium, he replied, "Because Switzerland has half a million of the most efficient soldiers in the world."

In this case even the advocates of unpreparedness must see that Switzerland's efficient military system did not provoke war, but prevented war. It protected the country, even without a war, because the Germans realized what the opposition of Switzerland's 500,000 physically well-developed, intelligent and well-trained and well-officered soldiers would mean.

If the United States had a citizen soldiery proportionately as numerous and well trained as those of Switzerland, no nation in the world would ever think of attacking us.

The answer that any general would give to anyone who would ask him why he did not attack the United States would be:

"Because the United States has an army in civil life, but capable of being mobilized for immediate action, of ten million of the finest soldiers in the world;

"The finest soldiers because they are the finest specimens of physical manhood, having been perfected physically in the military exercises of the public schools;

"The finest soldiers because they are active and alert mentally, having been educated in the public schools in all branches of practical education, and with a sufficient knowledge of the requirements of military efficiency;

"The finest soldiers in the world because they could be capably officered by men who stand in the front ranks of the various scientific and engineering occupations of America, and who have been prepared for those leading positions by the great national universities of America which give their graduates a technical military education as well as the general scientific education necessary for success in civil life."

In this last paragraph Mr. Hearst refers to his own plan of providing OFFICERS capable of handling the reserve troops when suddenly called to the colors.

Instead of having one hundred and forty-four additional officers created every year, there should be not less than fifty times that many, and probably even a great many more than that.

The best way in which officers can be produced in these numbers is the way which has been so long advocated by the Hearst newspapers, namely, the establishment of government universities where students can receive a general education combined with a military education.

These universities should be absolutely free, and should be open to all who, in the lower schools of the nation, have developed a tendency toward mathematics, engineering and scientific specialization.

To men with this inclination the technical training of a military course would be of great advantage in their civil career, even if they never entered the army or never had occasion to be drafted as officers.

But all these men who graduated from such national universities would be available for officers in case the United States ever was compelled to war. In fact, THEIR FREE EDUCATION SHOULD BE ON THAT BASIS AND WITH THAT UNDERSTANDING.

A certain number of these graduates who elected to go into the army could do so, and the rest would distribute themselves throughout the citizenship, engaging in the occupations of peace, in scientific work, in surveying, engineering, and all such analogous pursuits, doubly fitted and fortified for such pursuits by the general education and the technical training they had received at the national universities.

These national universities should be established in various parts of the country. There should be, as now, a naval university at Annapolis, of course; another one at New Orleans, another one in New England, one on the Great Lakes, and one on the Pacific Coast.

There should be another series of national universities for military technical training instead of naval; one at West Point, one in the Middle Northwest, at Chicago, St. Paul; one in the Middle Southwest, at Atlanta, St. Louis; one at some such Western city as Denver, and one on the Pacific Coast.

The whole country would then be fairly well covered with national universities, adding to the education of the citizenship and giving each student, in addition, a military or naval technical training and scientific education, which, as stated above, would not only fit him for service to his country in time of war, but would prove of special advantage to him in any technical scientific occupation of civil life.

With a reserve force of millions of citizens who have had forty days' military training and a reserve force of graduate officers, this nation could get along with a comparatively small standing army and still be ready for any war.

It seems to us that prudence, good sense and patriotism all counsel the immediate adoption of these plans of preparedness.

Scientific Use of the Imagination

It Enables Us to See Things Invisible, to Advance Knowledge Into Regions Apparently Impenetrable, and to Play at Will with Worlds and Suns

By Garrett P. Serviss

AMONG the many phenomena which our fellow-men present to us for our wonder and instruction, none is more curious than the strange limitation of the power of the imagination which seems to make many persons unable to see, mentally, things which are not evident to their eyesight. This is illustrated by the following question which, singularly enough, has come almost simultaneously from places as wide apart as San Francisco, Chicago and Brooklyn, N. Y.:

"If the world were twice larger, and a perfect globe, and a piece of glass a quarter of an inch square were put on it, would every part of the glass touch the globe?"

Assuming, as seems due from the character of the letters, that the question is seriously asked, one wonders why it was thought necessary to double the size of the earth. Taking the earth as it is, if it were an absolutely perfect sphere, a perfectly flat bit of glass, a quarter of an inch square, laid upon it would seem, even if viewed with a powerful microscope, to touch at the central point.

The earth rounds off eight inches in a mile, and the amount of the depression varies as the square of the distance from the tangent point, or point of touch. An eighth of an inch (half the diameter of the piece of glass), is the 506,880th part of a mile. The source of this is 256,927,334,400. Divide this by eight and we see that the space separating the outer edge of the glass from the sphere would be about one-thirty-two-thousand-millionth of an inch! This space would be decreased with increase of the earth's size, but no matter how large the earth became there would always be some space left.

Time and thought given to such things are by no means wasted, because they show how limited would be our knowledge of the universe around us if that knowledge were confined to what we could actually see, or measure with instruments. Upon the scientific use of the imagination is based a very large part of the knowledge of nature that we possess. If we could not mentally see things which are invisible and inseparable to our physical senses, we should know nothing about molecules, atoms and electrons. The electrons, which are the smallest known particles of what we call matter, have been estimated to be only one twenty-million-millionth of an inch in diameter, which is more than 600 times less than the minute space of which we formed a mental picture in the calculation made above. On the other hand, the diameter of a hydrogen molecule is probably about 600 times greater than that space.

There is nothing that the imagination cannot do. It leads science at every step. Often it seems to lead astray, and when its pictures of possibilities contradict what we already know we must reject them until further knowledge settles the question. In their mind's eye certain men of science foresaw the division of the atom into still smaller particles long before a practical demonstration was obtained of the actual existence of those smaller particles, now called electrons. That was a case in which the imagination did not lead astray. It is not difficult to imagine the electrons again divided into something smaller yet, but science will speak of such division only when, if ever, it has a demonstration of it.

As an exerciser in the use of the imagination, suppose we take a look through the mind's telescope from the wrong end. You know that if you look at a house through a spyglass, or opera glass, reversed, the object seems to have been greatly diminished in size, and to have been removed to a corresponding distance. Now, it is easy, in the mind, to treat the whole earth the same way. Increase of actual distance has the same effect of size that is produced by increase of apparent distance.

The earth is 8,000 miles in diameter, and living on its surface we cannot see it as a whole. But if we went to the moon we would see the earth as a ball nearly four times as great in diameter as the full moon now appears to us. Go long twice as far, the earth would have the same apparent size as the moon. Now, an electron, the smallest known thing, has a diameter of one 20,000,000,000,000th of an inch; how far would we have to go in order that the apparent size of the earth (if we could see it at all, which of course we couldn't), should be no greater than that of an electron one foot away?

There is no need to display the calculation here; it suffices to give the result. The distance would be over 1,900 quadrillions of miles, or away beyond the known limits of the starry universe! And yet, though the earth were at that tremendous distance, and hopelessly invisible, the imagination could see it perfectly well, and just so the imagination can see the electron, when once assured of its existence.

The Warrior

By William F. Kirk

THERE he sat, old Hiram Fox,
On an empty cracker box,
Every minute getting bolder
With a chip upon his shoulder,
Grimly talking through his hat,
There he sat!

"No, sir! Uncle Sam is yeller!
Don't ye say he ain't, young feller!
If I had my way I'd larn 'em,
All them foreign nations, darn 'em!
Tell ye what—I'd like to see
Some one sink a ship on me!
There'd be Cain to pay about it
Double quick, and don't ye doubt it!
Germany knows well enough
We won't never call no bluff.
England busts our Constitution—
She's forgot the Revolution!"

Thus orated Hiram Fox
On an empty cracker box.
Talking, talking through his hat,
There he sat!

"Ah! Another Silas Jones Story!"

That Is What the Great World of Fiction-Lovers Will Say, Silas, if, Having the GIFT, You Write YOURSELF Into Your Stories. DON'T Try to Be "Another O. Henry."

"Curly, the tramp, sidled toward the free-lunch counter. He caught a fleeting glance from the bartender's eye, and stood still, trying to look like a business man who had just dined at the Menger and was waiting for a friend who had promised to pick him up in his motor car. Curly's histrionic powers were equal to the impersonation, but his make-up was wanting."

This is the opening paragraph of a story by ——— which will be printed complete in the Sunday AMERICAN tomorrow.

Suppose we were to print this announcement, as above, and add that a prize of one dollar, or five dollars, or ten dollars, would be paid to every reader of the AMERICAN who, within the next twenty-four hours should supply the missing name!

WHY do we recognize, so quickly, the work of O. Henry?
Because of his "style."
What IS style?
"Style," as any grammar-school boy will tell you, "is the mode of expressing thought in language; especially such use of language as exhibits the spirit and faculty of an artist."

One of the few great American artists—for the United States is an infant among the Nations—was that wonderful genius whom a dozen people—two dozen, maybe—knew as Sidney Porter, but whom the world knows as "O. Henry." Not to know O. Henry is to be ignorant of American literature. Our young friends who wish to be great, or even passably good, writers MUST read the O. Henry stories. Editors of the megaphone school are over-fond of proclaiming each fresh discovery in the sort of short-story writers as "another O. Henry." We hope the coming generation of Boston writers will not aim at being O. Henrys. There will never be "another O. Henry," any more than there will be another Shakespeare, or another Dickens, or another Mark Twain. If your name is Silas Jones, pour Silas Jones into your short stories. Make people say, "Ah! Another Silas Jones story!" Then, the editors will stop talking about O. Henry—THAT will not injure O. Henry—and will busy themselves discovering Silas Joneses.

The title of the O. Henry story which will be printed in full in the Sunday AMERICAN tomorrow is "The Higher Abdication."

There NEVER was a poor O. Henry story. This is one of his best. We mention it, at the beginning of a few words calling your attention to our Sunday edition, because—you know the feeling, all of you—one does get SO tired of war and warring, fights and fighting.

And yet.

O. Henry shakes hands with us in a narrow mesquit-paved street in San Antonio, and San Antonio is in Texas.

If we WERE in Texas, this morning, we should find it mighty difficult to get away from war and warring.

Our friend the telegraph editor, sitting at the next desk, hands us a "bulletin" announcing the progress of Dodd's cavalry, which crossed the Mexican border yesterday morning and is on the way to join the troops under Pershing. We are going to "get" Mr. Villa, of course, but from Maine to California we are going to be an anxious people until we DO get him. None of us will be without his favorite newspaper until the Mexican question is settled right.

The Sunday AMERICAN will print ALL the news of the Villa hunt that can be obtained from Mexico, New Mexico or Texas.

And all the news about the Great War in Europe, too.

For three long and terrible weeks, the French and the Germans have been battling in and around Verdun, which is almost as near to Paris as Springfield is to Boston. So near—for three agonizing weeks—and yet so far!

Gentlemen in London will wager one dollar against your two that the Great War will be over in September . . . . Max WE hope to be out of Mexico by that time? . . . . New York reports a "new low record price for German marks," and a "sharp rally in sterling exchange." . . . . IS the end coming? . . . . The American Congress begins seriously to DISCUSS preparedness . . . . When will discussion end and action begin?

The fighting spirit pervades the air. It augments popular interest in the meeting to take place in New York, one week from today, between Mr. Jess Willard, the champion heavyweight of the world, and Mr. Frank Moran, who has ambitions.

A Sunday AMERICAN article of great interest, in connection with the Willard-Moran meeting, has been written by Mr. John Lawrence Sullivan of North Abington, for twelve long years the premier fighting man of the world. Mr. Sullivan, with characteristic frankness, gives his estimate of Willard, his judgment of Moran, and his expert opinion of the coming battle. The Sunday AMERICAN will also print stories, dictated exclusively for the Hearst newspapers, by both Willard and Moran.

Full-length photographs of "Charley" Mitchell, "John L." James J. Corbett, "Jim" Jeffries, Willard, Sharkey and "Bob" Fitzsimmons accompany "Jess Willard's Own Story of the Best Blows Used by Champions." No man interested in the manly art of self-defence—and there are all of us interested in self-defence—will want to be without THIS story and THESE photographs.

Every parent in BOSTON, every school-teacher in BOSTON and every child, of high-school age, in BOSTON, will read with concern a Sunday AMERICAN report of how the Boston School Committee plans to save $35,000 by curtailments in the high schools of this city.

Citizens of CAMBRIDGE will give special attention to a Sunday AMERICAN report of how the city of the university has become, over night, one of the great munitions cities of the East.

Republicans in ESSEX COUNTY will be interested in the charge made by Roosevelt Republicans in that county that a young Salem attorney is Governor McCall's "official dispenser of patronage," and also acts as chief herdsman for the Weeks, or "Big Four," ticket for the National Convention. We publish the young gentleman's picture.

Every woman in New England will be interested in the Sunday AMERICAN report of the great uprising of 30,000 Rhode Island women to compel the by-no-means-too-progressive Legislature of that commonwealth to pass a law forbidding the employment of women and girls in cotton mills between darkness and dawn.

Every page of the Sunday AMERICAN will have something to interest, inform or entertain New England.

THAT is why more copies of the Sunday AMERICAN are SOLD every week than of any other Sunday newspaper printed in New England.

The Sunday AMERICAN is New England's greatest Sunday newspaper!
